Let France, Italy Worry. We Have Our Troubles. Racketeering Profits. A Costly Thirst.

—By ARTHUR BRISBANE—

YOU MAY read:

"Washington fears that the hitch between Italy and France on their shipping program may be serious."

It may be serious for France and Italy, but it need not be serious for us if we attend to our own business, keeping ourselves prepared for any kind of navy, surface, air or submarine fleets that others may build.

WE HAVE things in THIS country that are serious and ought to keep Washington busy, for instance, our millions of unemployed, a deficit of $800,000,000 which threatens, and the danger of discouraging business enterprise, employment and industry, by increasing taxation.

WHILE UNCLE SAM struggles with a deficit of $800,000,000, and his treasury worries about a few hundred millions of bonus for veterans, it may interest you know where the "real money" goes.

The "racket" in fraudulent securities in New York state alone, according to the state crime commission, amounts to $400,000,000 a year. The United States district attorney for Eastern New York says racketeers take from two to four hundred millions a year from almost every business in New York City.

THE REWARD of racketeering in the United States, throughout the country, according to the crime commission, is FROM TWELVE TO EIGHTEEN BILLION DOLLARS A YEAR.

That would more than run all the government expenses, including pensions, bond interest, army, navy and amortization of the national debt, and leave billions to spare.

Racketeering, born of prohibition, seems to be an expensive institution.

In England the kind of ale that cost 7 cents before the war now costs 16 cents. That, the average Briton calls "shameful."

British spending is small compared with ours. The gloomy dean says we spend 21,000 million dollars a year on amusements alone, including golf, cigarets, chewing gum and soda water, enough to pay all of England's expense and wipe out the debt.

THE CALLOUS American, believe it or not, replies:

"We would rather amuse ourselves with the $21,000,000,000 than use it to pay England's expenses and wipe out the British debt."

When racketeers learn that amusements in America cost several billions more than they collect, they probably will do something about it.

IN ENGLAND the national bill for alcoholic drink dropped $55,000,000 in 1930, compared with 1929. There is no drop in our prohibition country.

Also, fortunately for Britain, the British drop in consumption is chiefly in the consumption of whisky and gin. Beer instead of whisky and gin is a good program if you must drink something with alcohol in it.

RUSSIA ASKS why Japan doesn't answer a letter of protest and inquiry regarding the shooting of Paul Anikeieff, Russia's commercial counsellor to Japan.

Serious trouble between Russians and Japanese would be regrettable now, with the world still licking its wounds from the big war, and worrying about its depression.

ANOTHER Russian - Japanese war would not be like the last, when Japan was fighting grand dukes that couldn't fight very well, nor supply very good ammunition. A different kind of Russia would meet Japan today, a kind that would call for all of Japan's extraordinary courage and resourcefulness.

THE PRESIDENT of the Seattle Chamber of Commerce, Mr. King Dykeman, wishes the world to know that the Wanatchee and Yakima districts of his state, Washington, have shipped their five millionth box of Washington apples. Wenatchee and Yakima, celebrating with Seattle this accomplishment, shipping box No. 5,000,000 to Hamburg.

Other boxes, from the same state, have gone all over the world, and have brought to the owners of Washington apple trees more than $6,000,000.

What is more important, they have helped to build up the health of millions that have eaten them.

"HOW USE doth breed a habit in a man!" Things start small, and grow, fortunately for power companies, the A. T. & T., and other big enterprises.

The White House had one telephone instrument from 1878 to 1898, and then one telephone extension was added. In 1924, the White House had four incoming lines, and 26 stations.

Now the White House has a double switchboard, and 102 working lines. And since President Hoover was elected, 711,780 telephone calls have been made to and from the White House.

Simple Rites for Rockne Burial

'BOYS' CARRY VIKING TO LAST REST

Team Members Pallbearers For Notre Dame Coach; Many Notables at Funeral

By JIMMY CORCORAN
International News Service.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., April 4.—When dusk comes down over the Indiana farm lands late today they'll lay Knute Rockne away to his last rest.

Notre Dame warriors of the sport field, men of muscle but tender hands, will carry him to his haven in Highland Cemetery, close by Old Council Oaks, where 250 years ago, LaSalle sat and smoked the pipe of peace with the Indians.

Here on nights when the wind is still, the chimes from the Sacred Heart Church on the campus will echo over the shrine and quiet his restless spirit.

RITES TO LACK POMP

Requiem services at 3 p. m., central time, will be devoid of pomp. Rockne would want it that way. As the great Viking is brought to the foot of the altar, the choir will sing "Populus Meus," to be followed later by the "Miserere," the "Sub enite" and "O Vos Omnes."

Then the Rev. Charles L. O'Donnell will deliver the sermon on the man whose passing grieved a whole country. He will speak as to a pal, because he knew Rock since the first time he stepped on the campus lugging a battered suitcase 20 years ago.

The blessing will follow with the Rev. Michael Mulcaire, C. S. C.; the Rev. Thomas Steine, C. S. C., and the Rev. John F. O'Hara, C. S. C., officiating. The Rev. William O'Connor will act as master of ceremonies.

SERVICES ON AIR

Although thousands—from all parts of the country—will tread the campus, there will be room for no more than 1,500 inside the church. Only those holding cards will be admitted.

Amplifiers will carry the complete ceremony and Father

HYMIE GETS LIFE TERM IN KILLING

Conviction Starts Search For Gangster's 'Bosses;' Pittsburgh Aid Asked

CLEVELAND, April 4.—(A.P.)—"Pittsburgh Hymie" Martin, rum runner and gambler, today stood branded as the killer of former Councilman William E. Potter, but the conviction was only the start of the hunt for the "higher-ups."

No sooner had the jury of five women and seven men brought in the verdict late yesterday that means Martin must spend the rest of his life in the penitentiary than authorities announced they were seeking another alleged accomplice. When the second man is found, they believe they may be near to learning who ordered Potter's death and why.

The man now sought by Detective Inspector Cornelius W. Cody and Prosecutor Ray T. Miller is Harry Collins, alias Louis Klein, alias Louis Rohdy, alias Charles Marks—the man whom Martin said he was with the afternoon of the murder. He also was with Martin and Potter the same afternoon, Prosecutor Miller believes.

TWO OTHERS SOUGHT HERE

Pittsburgh police also were asked to pick up two other men for questioning.

Meanwhile, Defense Attorney William E. Minshall said he would file a motion for a new trial today or Monday and would charge that Judge Walter McMahon erred in urging the jury to come to an agreement when it reported a deadlock.

The jury's verdict—guilty of first degree murder with a recommendation of mercy—was given in dramatic fashion 25 hours from the time the jury retired. Martin, who through the trial had smiled confidently and smoothly answered questions—paled as he heard the decision which makes a life sentence mandatory. The blood drained from his face and his hand twitched nervously, but a moment later he had regained his composure and was telling reporters he had nothing to say.

LIFE SAVED BY WOMEN

Eleven ballots were taken, it was revealed, and at the outset stood seven to five for conviction. Three women jurors, who at first held out for acquittal, saved the Pittsburgh whisky runner's life. They were won over to conviction, but forced the compromise which precluded a death sentence.

RAINS BRING EXTENSIVE DAMAGE TO DISTRICT

Carnegie Cellars Inundated; Residents Forced to Move Furniture; Cable Broken

Twenty-five men were marooned today by flood waters on a man-made island in Chartiers Creek, five miles west of McKees Rocks, as result of last night's heavy rainfall which caused fears of a flood in the three rivers. Precipitation reached a total of 1.17 inches.

The men were engaged in changing the course of the creek to permit improvements to the Scully yards of the Pennsylavnia Railroad. Efforts are being made to remove the men in boats, but the work is being hampered by a strong current. They are in no immediate danger, however.

Flood waters, which surged down Chartiers Creek, flooded a temporary dam erected to change the course of the stream.

FEARS ALLAYED

The stage at the Point at 10 o'clock today was 21.8 feet. Although the waters were rising at the rate of 2.5 inches an hour, the termination of the rain, general throughout Western Pennsylvania, should allay fears of a flood, Weather Forecaster Brotzman said. The crest of the rise will be reached probably tonight and will not exceed 24 feet, one foot under the Pittsburgh flood stage, Brotzman said.

Most of the water was coming from the Monongahela River. In the upper Allegheny River valley the stage was practically unaffected by the rain. A little water was expected from the Allegheny, south of Kiski.

CELLARS THREATENED

In Carnegie, residents and business owners along Chartiers Creek, responding to warnings by police, were removing furniture and stocks from cellars threatened by rapidly rising waters.

Workmen were engaged in repairing a sewer drop which, un-

2 SHOT IN SIEGE OF RUM GANG

FALMOUTH, Mass., April 4.—(INS.)—Twenty-five liquor smugglers, barricaded in a house, gave battle to town police during the night and after wounding Chief of Police William A. Mercer and Sergt. Roy S. Conant leaped from windows and escaped as police ammunition was exhausted.

Hundreds of shots were fired. Rifles and pistols were used.

A posse of state troopers, summoned to the scene, immediately went into the woods in search of the fleeing smugglers.

GROVER WHALEN VISITOR HERE

Dapper Grover A. Whalen, erstwhile greeter of famous people in New York, came to town today maintaining that he "knows nothing about politics and never did know anything about politics," to use his own words.

Wearing his famous derby, black coat and striped trousers, the former police commissioner of New York said:

Explaining what he meant by not knowing anything about politics, he said:

"Politics was my most deficient subject in school and in public life. The only thing I can talk about is business."

Whalen will be the principal speaker tonight at a banquet given in honor of A. H. Burchfield, president of Joseph Horne Company, at the William Penn Hotel.

Fireworks Await July 4, Says Walker to Quiz

CHICAGO, April 4.—(INS.)—Mayor James J. Walker, of New York, and his party, including A. C. Blumenthal, movie executive, were to leave here today for New York.

Walker arrived yesterday from California, where he has been vacationing far from charges preferred against his administration by a civic committee.

During his stay here, the dapper Mayor visited South Bend, Ind., where he paid his last respects to Knute Rockne, famous football coach, killed in a plane crash.

He displayed his usual wisecracking manner to reporters. He was asked:

"Not before the Fourth of July."

"Well, what about Gov. Roosevelt's demand for an explanation?"

"I've had a wonderful time in California."

TAXICAB PEACE MOVE MONDAY

Whether there will be another taxi drivers' walkout here will be determined at a meeting of union officials and a representative of the State Department of Labor Monday, it was said today, following tabulation of the ballots cast yesterday when drivers voted to strike if the company does not grant their demands.

The official announcement of the vote was 535 in favor of a strike and 132 opposed.

Officials refused to announce the vote, although members of the committee said that the decision to strike in protest of the company's alleged violation of its agreement with its drivers was overwhelming.

The vote was called to determine just how far the drivers would go to protect themselves, union officials said. Now that the drivers have indicated that they will walk out to protect their interests, a conference will be held in an effort to effect a settlement between them and the company.

Fred Shaffer, business agent of the union, said that Gov. Gifford Pinchot had been asked to send a conciliator from the State Department of Labor to Pittsburgh to go over the situation with union heads at the meeting Monday.

WEATHER IDEAL FOR EASTER

Generally fair weather will prevail throughout the Pittsburgh district on Easter Sunday, weather bureau officials predicted today.

The skies will be overcast but there is little possibility of rain. Cloud-flecked skies will be pierced occasionally by bright rays of sunshine.

This prediction will be welcomed by those who expect to attend Easter church services and flower shows, for indications are that women's finery will be safe in the usual Easter parades.

Whole World to Be United In Observing Easter

Associated Press.

Along the avenues—and in Hell's Kitchen—among the stalls and carts of South Halstead street—and along the babbling sidewalks of Harlem—on Pennsylvania avenue, Olive street, Market street, Euclid, Commonwealth avenues—in all America, and in all the world, Easter comes tomorrow.

In Washington, the President of the United States will attend a Masonic and a Quaker service. New York will observe the day with high hat, flashing fashions, elaborate church services.

In Jerusalem, in the shadow of Calvary, where Christ hung crucified, Easter will be celebrated under the muzzles of machine guns. Authorities fear trouble between the pro-mufti and anti-mufti forces from Hebron during the coincident Moslem feast of Nabi Moussa.

In San Francisco thousands will wind up the foot trails of Mt. Davison to stand beneath the lighted cross that tops it and greet the Easter sun.

Arizona's Yaqui Indians will dance in paint and masks to shrill piping of flutes and the weird roll of thunder drums.

Four hundred white-robed children, grouped in a Greek cross, in the Hollywood (Cal.) Bowl, will sing "Christ, the Lord, Is Risen Today," after trumpets have sounded.

And in Russia—where Communists do not believe in God—it will be just Sunday for many, although thousands of the Eastern Rite still will observe the day.

EVANS TO CALL CITY INSPECTORS ON PAVING CONTRACTS

TESTIMONY AGREEMENT REACHED

Former City Controller's Charges to Go on Record; Quiz Resumes on Monday

Henry Oliver Evans, former city controller, who has brought the charges that poor estimating has opened the door to fraud in the Department of Public Works, plans to call city inspectors for questioning regarding the various paving contracts on which they passed.

The investigation, which has been adjourned in order to give the heads of the Department of Public Works an opportunity to do some of their work, will be resumed at 10 a. m. Monday.

An agreement was reached Thursday between the attorneys that all of Evans' testimony will be admitted at one time, beginning Monday. This is a privilege for which Evans had been contending for some time.

INVOLVES 78 JOBS

It was first refused because it would not give the defense an opportunity to answer Evans' attacks at the time they were made, but considerable testimony has now been given on both sides and Attorney Lee C. Beatty, counsel for the defense, evidently now feels that the additional Evans figures may be handled in one group.

Evans will present 78 street paving and sewer contracts in which he says increases of 10 per cent or more have been noted in the final estimates.

Beatty has indicated that there are hundreds of jobs in the period from 1926 to 1928 in which the final estimates showed a decline from the contract estimate.

Engineers for the department in their testimony have said that in cases where some uncertainty existed as to the amount of material that would be needed, a sufficient quantity was put down to get a representative bid on that item, and no effort made to estimate the exact amount.

Since 1928, a system has been in effect whereby the uncertain quantities are labeled with a "C." These are known as contingent items and no attempt is made to hold them to the original figure.

Evans has sought to show that it is the practice of the State Highway Department where increases in quantities run above 15 per cent to call in the contractor and asked to be quoted a lower price.

LANG TESTIMONY

Director Edward G. Lang admitted in his testimony Thursday that in not more than five or six cases in 1,300 contracts have contractors been called in and asked to submit lower prices because the quantities on which they were bidding have been greatly increased.

The defense has been offered that in cases of decreases in quantities, it would not be legal for the city to offer the contractor a higher price. The Department of Public Works is expected to offer a large tabulation of decreases in quantities of materials used in contracts.

Passengers on a one-man Woods Run street car became panicky late yesterday when the car became short circuited at Western and Allegheny avenues and resulted in a 20-minute traffic jam. All metal attachments in the car were reported electrified. A small boy, standing with his mother, was shocked slightly and screamed. Others who came in contact with metallic parts became excited and rushed for the exits, it was reported.

A heavy boulder, loosened by the rain, fell to the Mt. Washington roadway during the night. It was removed by highway and sewers employes.

FAIRBURN, Ga., April 4.—(AP.)—An unidentified Negro, who early yesterday shot and fatally wounded Sheriff Thomas W. Camp, was shot down by a posse near here last night. Later he was reported near death in an Atlanta hospital.

He had wrested the gun from the officer and shot him when the sheriff overtook him as he fled when being taken from the courthouse to the jail. The Negro had been arrested on suspicion.

Capt. Oliver said "15 or 20" members of the posse fired on the Negro with shotguns and pistols.

CHIEF ENGINEER OF NAUTILUS SEA HERO

Shaw's Quick Action Saved Submarine O-13 When Rivets Burst Under Water

Aboard the trans-polar submarine, Nautilus, in which Sir Hubert Wilkins proposes to voyage under the ice to the North Pole, is a gallant company of adventurers, each pledged to brave death. Who are they? Why are they going? These questions are answered in a series of personality sketches dealing with the sea-weary "pigboat" men who have vowed to traverse the unknown reaches of the ice-encrusted Arctic. Below is the sixth, dealing with Ralph D. Shaw, engineer of the expedition.

By HERMAN GIESKE.

YONKERS, N. Y., April 4.—O-13.

That's an ominous numeral to the superstitious, and submarine men are notoriously the prey of omens and tokens.

Furthermore, it was Friday the thirteenth. So when it was proposed to take the O-13 down for a test dive on that day, a good many of her tentative crew rebelled.

It was a beautiful day on Long Island Sound, off the submarine base at New London, Conn., but somehow those awesome, mystic numerals seemed hovering in the air, whispering into the ears of the crew:

"Don't take her down today, boys—it's Friday the 13th."

Only Chief Engineer Ralph D. Shaw was undismayed. He urged:

"Why not? This is the O-13. It's her day, boys, let's take her down."

Well, take her down he did, and in doing so he took the deepest dive ever made, some 285 feet, a dive that represents a record still unshattered in that type of boat.

Chief Engineer Shaw, now 46, is alive to tell the tale, and now he's shipping aboard the trans-Polar submarine, Nautilus, for a 42-day jaunt under the ice from Spitzbergen to the North Pole and thence to Alaska.

What happened when the O-13 took her famous dive is one of the outstanding events of his life and taught him, he says, that one never can be too cautious or careful in submerging a boat.

PERFECT DIVE

The O-13 on that fateful day submerged beautifully and sank lower and lower beneath the surface of the waves. Down—down down—she went, a metal bubble controlled by man's mechanical skill. Down—down—down.

The gauge showed 240 feet. That was depth enough to meet the test. All aboard grew jubilant. One and all, including the skipper, they made for the cook's galley for a bite to eat.

They were busily munching when unexpectedly there was a sound like a rifle shot. The skipper thrust his nose out of the galley and inquired:

"What was that?"

Chief Engineer Shaw's trained ear detected something wrong. A rivet had been burst by the terrific pressure. A glance at the gauge showed they had settled to 285 feet, far beyond the submarine's warranted pressure.

An instant later there was a rat-tat-tat like a machine gun, as more rivets burst from the O-13's shell.

It was a peril—deadly peril, for all.

There was immediate action. Shaw, without waiting for an order, seized the mechanism that began to force water from the O-13's submerging compartments. The idea was to lighten her as speedily as possible. Fortunately, the boat floated higher and higher, making a record for speed in getting to the top. It was a white-faced crew that finally crawled out of her conning tower and once more breathed free air.

BEATEN VICTIM BALKS QUIZ

Etna police are investigating the finding of a man, aged about 27, severely beaten, in a rooming house at 372 Butler street, Etna, early today.

City police had no report of the alleged attack, they said.

LINGLE VERDICT FIGHT OPENS

CHICAGO, April 4.—(INS.)—Attorneys for Leo M. Brothers today are mustering their forces to prevent the natty St. Louis gunman from serving 14 years in prison, the sentence meted out by a jury for the murder of Alfred (Jake) Lingle, reporter.

Motion for a new trial has been made and a hearing set for April 17.

The verdict, described as a compromise, was reached by the jury late yesterday, after the 12 men had deliberated 27 hours.

Twenty-four ballots were taken on the guilt or innocence of the man accused of having shot Lingle to death in a pedestrian tunnel last June 9.

If the verdict is sustained Brothers would serve eight years and three months before being eligible for parole.

TWO WOMEN BANDITS HUNTED

North Side Man Robbed at Gun's Point; New Castle Store Proprietor Held Up

A bandit gang in which two women play principal roles was being sought by state police and city and county detectives following two holdups during the night. In both cases the automobile in which the gang traveled bore license plates of another state.

While a woman remained at the wheel of an automobile which stopped in Anderson street near Lacock street, another woman and her male accomplice stepped onto the sidewalk and at pistol point robbed Philip Franz, of 830 Spring Garden avenue, of $170 in cash and jewelry valued at $355 last midnight. The man and woman then entered the machine which was driven across the Ninth Street Bridge to the downtown section. The machine bore Ohio license plates.

GIRL IN BANDIT CAR

The North Side robbery occurred a few hours after city and county detectives had been asked by state police to be on the lookout for a bandit gang which staged a holdup in New Castle. Two men entered the store of Mrs. A. Marlin in South Jefferson street, New Castle, and robbed the proprietor of $725 and a revolver. A woman remained at the wheel of the automobile during the holdup. The machine carried Ohio license plates.

Two youthful robbers escaped after a gun battle early today when detected in the act of breaking into the grocery store of Chris Leon, at 178 Pearl street. Leon, awakened by the barking of his three fox terriers, went to the rear of his store and surprised two youths attempting to jimmy the kitchen door.

THUGS ESCAPE SHOTS

When he demanded to know their business, one of the pair opened fire. The two turned and fled as Leon drew a revolver and returned their fire. The grocer chased the pair for more than a block, during which time he emptied his revolver. He told police he believed he had wounded one of the youths.

The Luther Caterer, Inc., at 3917 Perrysville avenue was held up late last night by an armed man who ordered Miss E. M. Zoller, a clerk, to throw up her hands while he looted the cash register. The amount stolen was not made known to police.

World's Real Problems Spiritual, Says Coolidge

To the Editor of The Sun-Telegraph:

Tomorrow will be Easter Sunday. In every quarter of the globe it will be observed in memory of a risen Savior. So far-reaching has been this event, so wide has become the realm of Christendom, that it would be difficult to find anywhere on earth a human being whose life has not been modified in some degree by the influence of the Christian religion.

Mr. Coolidge

Outside the teachings of religion there is no answer to the problems of life. Our international and social relations cannot be solved by material forces. Armaments, wages, profits are not mere questions of quantity. They are questions of quality. Changing and fixing their amount will afford no final solution. What is needed is a change of mind, a change of attitude toward the use of these material things and toward each other. The real problems of the world are not material but spiritual.

Easter teaches us the reality of the things that are unseen, and the power of the spirit. A risen Savior established a new faith in the world that showed the reason and authority of service and sacrifice.

CALVIN COOLIDGE.

ANTI-RED DRIVE DENIED IN TOKIO

TOKIO, April 4.—(AP.)—Government officials denied today an anti-Soviet campaign was carried on here as Moscow asserted in a protest note regarding the shooting and wounding of Paul Anikeieff, Soviet counsellor to Japan, March 16.

The Foreign Office said an investigation indicated the attempt on the life of Anikeieff was of no political significance and had nothing to do with a fisheries dispute.

BUS HERO TO BE HOOVER GUEST

WASHINGTON, April 4.—(AP.)—The 13-year-old boy hero of the Colorado school bus tragedy will be rewarded for his resourcefulness by something not many grownups can boast of—a night at the White House as the guest of the President.

But the youngster will be without his brother, who froze to death with four other children in a school bus stalled in a blizzard near Towner, Col., last week.

After President Hoover returned from his Caribbean trip he read of the Colorado tragedy. Impressed by the story of Bryan Untiedt, he invited the boy to be his guest. The invitation was accepted, and in about two weeks Bryan will be able to leave the Lamar (Col.) Hospital and come to the Capitol.

Marines, Natives Execute 29 Looters, Rioters In Quake Ruins

By JULES DUBOIS
International News Service.

MANAGUA, Nicaragua, April 4.—Martial law ruled in quake-wrecked Managua today as American marines and the Guardia Nacional dealt out summary justice to 29 natives caught in the act of looting or inciting others to riot.

Looters and other violators of the stringent military rules were shot on sight.

Confronted for the first time since Tuesday's earthquake by the triple danger of attack from hungry natives, imminent outbreaks of disorders and recurring rumors of bandit raids, the relief authorities made every effort to complete the evacuation of American women and children.

Marines executed 14 native national guardsmen who were searching the smouldering ruins for valuables.

The Guardia Nacional executed 10 agitators caught in the act of inciting hungry survivors to riot, and shot dead four natives who drank the polluted waters of Lake Asososco crater. Fearing an outbreak of pestilence if refugees slaked their thirst on contaminated water in this vacinity, such an act has been proclaimed a major offense.

Reports that hundreds of hungry survivors who fled to the hills were planning to swoop down upon the city were partly substantiated during the night when 150 were arrested near the ruined airport. They were hiding in the undergrowth to await their opportunity to loot the city under cover of darkness. The prisoners were put to work clearing the streets of debris.

Military authorities were skeptical of rumors that organized groups of bandits were gathering for a raid on Managua, but nevertheless took precautionary measures against such an eventuality.

As the ruins yielded more and more dead, authorities were inclined to raise previous estimates of 1,000 dead to as high as 5,000. Because of the many that were cremated in the conflagration Tuesday and Wednesday, it was pointed out that the actual number of fatalities would never be known.

JOCELYN WINS DIVORCE FIGHT

LOS ANGELES, April 4.—(AP.)—As the smoke cleared today from a barrage of charges and counter-charges by Jocelyn Lee, film actress, and Luther Reed, her director-husband, Miss Lee held a divorce, custody of their two children and an order for $100 a week alimony.

Superior Judge Joseph P. Sproul yesterday decided Reed was not guilty of unfaithfulness and that the flame-haired actress' conduct was not above reproach. Many of the charges were not proved, he said.

The hearing lasted a week and drew in the names of Bert Wheeler, comedian, and Ivan St. John, publicity man, as witnesses, and Bert Lytell and Robert Woolsey, actors, as being present at the Casino in Agua Caliente when Reed and his wife quarreled over money for gambling.

LONG BANS RUM EXTRADITION

MONTGOMERY, Ala., April 4.—(AP.)—Dr. Huey P. Long, governor and senator-elect of Louisiana, regards a prohibition violation as only a misdemeanor and therefore not an offense to justify extradition.

In a message to Gov. B. M. Miller, of Alabama, Dr. Long refused to honor a requisition for Emery M. Williams, who escaped from officers after they had arrested him on a charge of possessing three quarts of liquor. Dr. Long said:

"Inasmuch as violation of our own prohibition law is only a misdemeanor, we make no similar requests on other states."

Police Expert Slain In Home by Wife

JULIAN STAYS IN CELL

LAREDO, Tex., April 4.—(AP.)—Further official action in the case of C. C. Julian, widely known oil operator charged with kidnaping and assault with intent to rob L. S. Bolling, San Antonio businessman, was awaited today.

A preliminary hearing postponed, Sheriff Joe Condren refused to comment on a report the grand jury would consider charges against Julian and C. C. Boren, held with him. The men remained in the county jail here. Julian made no endeavor to post bond, which the sheriff indicated he was willing to accept.

Julian and Boren were charged jointly yesterday in a complaint filed before Justice of the Peace Leopoldo Villegas. Bolling told officers the men entered his room at a hotel here, demanded $50,000 of him and were attempting to take him away when they were arrested in the lobby.

Officials of Winburn Field, San Antonio, Tex., said Julian's plane Cherokee, piloted there by Luther E. "Red" Gray with three passengers Wednesday, was in storage in a field hangar.

LOS ANGELES, April 4.—(AP.)—Trial of a suit for $1,170 damages brought by Mary Astor, film actress against Vivian Duncan, one of the dancing Duncan sisters and wife of Nils Asther, was postponed until June 8 because Miss Duncan's attorney informed the court she had become a mother in Wurttemberg, Germany, March 20. ## WE NOW PRESENT

By DARRELL V. MARTIN, Radio Editor

Frank Weis and his Red Arrow Quartet herald the arrival of Easter with a special concert on KDKA at 11:15 tonight . . . Ed Sprague, tenor, repeats Ketelby's beautiful "In a Monastery Garden" . . . and let's hope they use the chimes . . . "Lead Kindly Light" is on the Ben Alley-Ann Leaf program, WJAS at 8:15 . . . Lady Isabelle and the cast of "East Lynne" do a one-hour stand on Hank Simmons' Show Boat, WJAS at 10 . . . NBC presents Gene Austin for WCAE listeners at 7 . . . and Weber and Fields, whose prohibition sketch on Gov. Smith and the Empire State Building, was censored last Saturday night just as they were about to go on the air, introduce some new terms and new sticks for the good old game of golf, WCAE at 8 . . . "Three O'Clock In the Morning" is to be sung by Ted Lewis, the man who made it famous, WCAE at 7:30.

We think polo can be made interesting to the armchair. For a sample, tune WJZ at 9 and hear the first game of the Round Robin Tournament.

Harry Salter has a temperamental group of artists in Ross Gorman, banjoist; Harry Brewer, xylophonoist, and Benny Kreuger, banjoist—all Class A soloists who are only cogs in the wheel in Salter's 12-piece orchestra.

Speaking of saxophones, Rudy Wiedoeft, the man who taught Rudy Vallee, is guest artist on KDKA Monday night.

* * *

Arthur Brown, affable WCAE operator, went to a hospital to convalesce . . . in two months he felt like tossing a medicine ball around the wards . . . the doctor wouldn't allow it . . . so "Brownie," always an industrious youth, got busy with wire and pliers and installed a radio at every patient's bed . . . another in the auditorium . . . and even a microphone so that the superintendent of the hospital can speak to every patient without leaving his desk . . .

We miss "Brownie" a whole lot . . . plenty of successful Pittsburgh radio artists can thank him for their technique . . . he used to take a personal interest in local artists and assisted them in gauging their volume and distance from the microphone. . .

If something went wrong with the "works" it so tormented Brownie that he would sooner tear down the plant and hunt for the trouble than let the program go on the air "sour." . . .

The LOUDSPEAKER

By LOUIS REID

NEW YORK, April 4.—At the not infrequent intervals whenever the bigwigs of music get together the cry that "jazz is on the wane" finds its way into the public prints. Were this department paid the sum of $5 for every time he has read it he could have retired long ago to a life of reckless senility at Monte Carlo.

If by jazz is meant all dance music—and that is what the term signifies to the maestros—then it is decidedly not on the wane. It is no more disappearing from the American scene than the hog dog or the flivver is disappearing. It is merely becoming high hat.

* * *

The old-fashioned strident, shrieking voice of jazz has been pretty well stilled save in Chicago and certain sections of Harlem. It is now as respectable as Johann Strauss and Victor Herbert. It has received bows within the last few years from Gatti-Cazazza, from Stokowski, Hadley and Damdosch. It has stormed into the cavernous reaches of Carnegie, has faced the now-not-so-golden horseshoe of the Metropolitan.

* * *

In short, it is today all dressed up and has a place to go. And the place it chooses above all others is the radio studio. It cares little that the broadcasting moguls refuse to be gracious, insist upon calling it by other names. It knows that so long as the old barbaric beat of the drum continues it is jazz, and nothing but. Fifty million listeners demand it regularly and often in every part of America. Fifty million listeners, it seems only right to say, can't be wrong.

* * *

Yes, with radio, jazz is more strongly intrenched than ever. It is revolutionizing European music as it has already revolutionized American. They say Stravinsky is busy behind locked doors writing what he hopes will be the great jazz expression of the age.

We, nourished on jazz, rocking within our borders its very cradle, are also writing it indelibly on the music of our times. It colors all of our songshows, all of our musical shows. It forms one-third of all radio programs. Strange, considering its force and popularity, the broadcasters seek to disguise it, to weasel-word it.

* * *

The dance bandmen on the air waves are responsible for stabilizing jazz. It is they who took it out of its rowdy clothes, dressed it up, refined it—refined it for the easeless voices of the crooners and elevated it to its present representation of all dance music, whether the music is written in zippy fox trot tempo or in the languid measures of the waltz. They air its notes continuously. After 11 p. m. it is difficult to find anything on the loudspeaker save a jazz band.

* * *

But jazz today is emphasizing melody rather than noise; it is discarding the bleats and wah-wahs of the trombone and substituting pipe organs and accordions. It is even giving the 'cellos a chance. It daily becomes more ambitious as its sponsors and interpreters seek to express the hectic panorama of America. It has become as much a part of our national life as home brew, the skyscraper, the tabloids, the ice cream soda and the drug store sandwich.

* * *

In so doing it has put a fairly definite end to the syrupy and sobby ballads. Occasionally one crops up, such as "When Your Hair Has Turned to Silver," to show that there's life in the old styles yet. In the main, however, gaiety jazz has introduced a vigorous, colorful, original expression to American gaiety and emotion. For such we are grateful.

NEW AFTERNOON FROCKS BEAUTIFUL AND PRACTICAL

Paris Bureau, Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph.

PARIS, April 4.—The new afternoon frocks are quite obviously graduates of the charm school. For charm is their chief theme—charm coupled with a practical appeal that should be irresistable to most women. The new afternoon frocks veer towards simplicity, but are by no means simple. Clever and novel touches and details do much towards making each frock an outstanding model. The materials offer a wide range for woolens and silks are included in various old and new weaves.

* * *

TUCKS AND FOLDS are important, as they offer ornamentation without elaboration. Skirts are not bound to certain restriction, for some are circular with a flare, while others flaunt shirred flounces. Very few of them show trimming, and when it is used, fur is the popular choice.

* * *

RATHER THAN digress further on the new afternoon modes of the more informal type, we would show you sketches of two of the most representative models. The frock to the left is by Lanvin and is of pale pink wool crepella. There are no sleeves, but the deep cape over each arm reaches quite to the elbow. At each side of the bodice are overpieces resembling boleros and passing beneath the arms around to the back. Wide loops of skunk fur, placed on each hip, simulate pockets. The skirt has a slight circular flare and is moderately long, perhaps 10 inches only from the floor.

* * *

GRAYISH-GREEN, triple georgette makes the other afternoon frock from Louise Boularger. The edges of the short sleeves, the open bolero and the deep skirt yoke, are pleated into inch-wide, stitched folds, or deep tucks, one might better describe them. There is a wide shirred flounce edging the skirt.

Breaking in Easter Shoes

By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER

ticket will be Mr. Hoover and six telephone girls.

British round of drinks for 1930 was $1,387,500,000. If it is that expensive we'll keep our present arrangement.

Government is still working on the budget. By June it hopes to reduce the swelling enough to cram it into a Zeppelin hangar.

Threat to send gangster tax evaders to jail isn't so bad. Even honest citizens are willing to go there for the three meals.

Which indicates that politics is getting better. An island is very easily lost, traded or merged.

From now on we will simmer gently until the next meeting of Congress. The South is rallying against Raskob in another of those premature campaigns that will be obscured if another big chunk falls off Niagara Falls.

We almost agree with the Republican leader of the hopeless majority when he says to his opponents:

"Boys, let's go easy on each other this summer. Next year is both presidential and leap year.

"I'll run for President and you do the leaping.

"Why should we use up the present supply of vituperation and other national publicity on each other? Why should we start this summer with billingsgate and oratorical reprisals?

"Why not save our epithets and catcalls for 1932 when they will not only be timely but appropriate?

"Why should we call each other names this spring when they will mean so much next year?"

Which is not only reasonable but also non-partisan. The trouble with most of our politicians is that they launch their boats too far inland.

The smart boys are laying low and getting ready for the big skirmish the second November after the next big budget.

And the South's young rally against Raskob's doesn't bother that young fellow. They can call him all the names they want. They are just letting off their esteem.

But they're letting off their esteem too early. Folks will forget this summer while rubbing linseed oil on their sunburn. Save it up until 1932 and it will mean something.

This is just a little advice from a Gypsy fortune teller who couldn't guess what was happening in a cracker box if he had three periscopes.

You can take it for what it's worth. But a haystack is no place to thread a needle and 1931 is not a presidential year.

REVIEWS OF NEW BILLS AND GENERAL AMUSEMENT CHRONICLES

SIDEWALKS of PITTSBURGH

By William Pfarr

Most banquets are, needless to say, dull affairs at which one listens to a half-dozen uninteresting speeches. One of the local exceptions is the Amen Corner affair, which is just around the corner. Senator Frank Harris and his colleagues usually line up a roster of speechmakers who avoid the conventional and try to be interesting. This year, for example, the Amen corner selected Bugs Baer, Rube Goldberg, and the late Knute Rockne and Irvin Cobb as possible speakers, among others. Baer's price was $1,000; Goldberg wanted 10 per cent of the gate; Rockne said he couldn't arrange his dates, and Cobb asked a sum which was regarded as rather steep.

William Pfarr

Baer was an Amen speaker a year or two ago. His price then was $500. But since then he has become, besides a newspaper notable, a radio figure. Thus the increase.

Speechmaking generally isn't what it used to be. It used to be the chairman of the speakers' committee could call up Joe Bump, the humorist, and politely request Joe to show up on the night of the banquet and make a speech. The meal wouldn't cost Joe a dime, the chairman explained generously. More often than not, Bump was willing, even glad to accept, not alone for the meal but for the honor of the affair.

Nowadays you pay for your speaker more often than not. Booking agents can supply you almost anything you want, from a 60-minute expose on conditions in India (rate: $10) to a 15-minute dissertation on the advantages of four-wheel brakes.

Joe Mackrell, being the register of wills, is necessarily a politician, and Harry Estep, being the congressman, is the same. So when Mackrell introduced Estep as a speaker at the dinner to the new postmaster, Mr. Anderson, he said:

"And if Estep doesn't tell on me, I won't tell on him."

* * *

Possibly because they have to listen to the lengthy speeches of lawyers, judges, who used to be lawyers themselves once, are generally critical of their fraternity. At least Judge Swearingen is, or probably was, when a young lawyer, who was having trouble obtaining information on cross-examination from a stubborn witness appealed to the bench with this plea:

"Your Honor, we feel the witness should be made to answer yes or no in the affirmative."

* * *

Attorney James Callaghan and a friend were talking about this and that. Said the friend:

"You're lucky. You're a lawyer. You got a profession, you're educated, and here I am—no education, never got past the fifth grade and things aren't breaking good. I can't even spell Punxsutawney."

"Who," asked Callaghan, as he recovered from the shock, "can?"

* * *

Biography: Attorney Frank Piekarski, strapping, well-known attorney, was the first of the football icemen, preceding Red Grange by 15 years. It was during the summer. Piekarski needed the money to continue his studies at Penn, so he hustled ice. And ice in those days wasn't the ice of today. If you were an iceman, you had to pull your ice from the plant and throw it onto your wagon yourself. Later Piekarski was selected an "All-America lineman. That's how he got those shoulders.

WILL ROGERS SAYS

BEVERLY HILLS, Cal., April 4.

To the Editor, Sun-Telegraph:

Just when the country was doing all it could to economize in government, along comes a law and says, "Every time your state gets so many thousand new population, they must all throw in and hire another representative in Congress.

Will Rogers

Well, California foolishly grew, and now they got to pay for it. A dozen unemployed must be sent to Congress by the taxpayers. California is split wide in two. The north of the state claims these new ones shall come from the south, and the south claims they should come from the north, and the taxpayers are so sore about having to hire extra ones that they don't care where they come from, but are telling 'em where to go. Yours,

WILL.

Telephone Operator Coming As Movie Heroine in Clara Bow's Next

By HARRISON CARROLL

(Copyright, 1931, by Premier Syndicate.)

HOLLYWOOD, April 4.

Having at last come around to the opinion that Clara Bow should have dramatic roles, Paramount plans for the red-headed star to follow "Kick In" with "The Woman," a story about a telephone operator.

Stuart Walker, who has given many stage stars their early training, will come out to direct as soon as he finishes his season at the Cincinnati Repertory Theater. In the meanwhile, Clara looks forward to a month's vacation at her Malibu Beach place.

Clara Bow

"The Woman" was written several years ago by William De Mille, but never found its way to the screen.

Among the stars whom Walker has helped to train for the stage are Peggy Wood, Mary Ellis, Basil Rathbone, Ben Lyon, Kay Francis and Bert Lytell.

LATEST GOSSIP

After reading the dialogue on "The Common Law," Constance Bennett is said to have told the studio that part of it would have to be rewritten. As a result, Horace Jackson, ace dialoguist of the company has been assigned to the task . . . Another studio-star disagreement has arisen between Gloria Swanson and United Artists. The studio wants to purchase "Rockabye" from her and to pay her a salary and percentage. This seems to be okey with Gloria, but they can't come to an agreement on the price of the story . . . Mrs. Glenn Tryon is recovering from an appendicitis operation at the Hollywood Hospital . . . For some reason best known to himself, Lewis Ayres went shopping downtown and bought a 1920 automobile for $12. Maybe he's trying to shame Universal . . . John Barrymore, who loves seclusion, has a tower on his house that is accessible only by a ladder from the outside.

POLA AWAITED

Wisely, no doubt, R-K-O is making no attempt to look for a story for Pola Negri until after her arrival in Hollywood this month. It has been determined, however, that Paul Stein will direct her. He did "The Red Peacock," which was one of her most popular vehicles before coming to America.

Pola Negri

Yielding to the persuasion of Editor Ray Long, Wallace Smith is to write a series of short stories for the Cosmopolitan Magazine. This will be in addition to his screen work at R-K-O, but the studio is to have a 30-day option on the film rights to the stories.

IN LADY SPY ROMANCE MARLENE DIETRICH ACTS SUPERBLY

By GEORGE SEIBEL

Not less than 20 women were shot as spies during the late unpleasantness in Europe, though only the names of Edith Cavell and Mata Hari made sensational news, so the film romance in which Marlene Dietrich plays the patriotic traitor is not beyond the bounds of credibility. But whether there was any spy as fascinating and clever, or as fond of a sable Persian kitten, may be doubted. Not when Marlene Dietrich is on the screen, for she would make you believe anything, even the wildest exploits in "Dishonored," the picture at the Penn.

George Seibel

HERE IS VIVID DRAMA

"Dishonored" as a picture has no depth, but what a surface! It is projected in the continental way, with impressionistic vividness. The beautiful Viennese widow who loves her Austria, but lets a dangerous enemy spy escape because perhaps she loves him more, is in the center of many exciting scenes planned and pictured with rare skill.

There is a moment when Marlene's musical translation of her spy record merges into the offensive of the war machine that is epic in sweep.

There is another moment when the officer who presides at her execution offers to bandage her eyes, and she wipes the tears from his own with the bandage, that is electric with emotion, discharged in the officer's wild denunciation of "war as murder."

JACK BENNY'S TURN

Jack Benny dominates the stage show, with Evelyn Wilson singing capitally, Duval producing avalanches of silk from a little cylinder of paper, and Billy Rolls turning pinwheels or balancing on the arms of frail chairs. And the way Marie Marsh tells her Malaprop story puts the audience into convulsions.

The Chester Hale Girls, whose terpsichorean technique is well established, showed their skill in a new act the magician must have envied—extracting coins from purses for the vaudeville artists. Marlene Dietrich couldn't have done it better.

"SKIPPY" IS SINCERE MOVIE DRAMA OF CHILDHOOD

By MILDRED FILLMORE

Skippy on the comic page makes you smile. Skippy, in the movies, digs down inside of you; plays an emotional symphony with your heart strings. You'll laugh—and some of you will cry.

The picture by that name, current in both the Fulton and the Sheridan Square, is the sincerest drama of childhood that has ever come from Hollywood.

Skippy, young son of a physician, is a product of the safe and clean environment of middle class life in a small town. But his eyes stray from well-kept houses and lawns across the tracks to Shanty Town. There he finds goats, tin cans, alleys, smells and friendship. And through boyhood eyes there are elegance in these things.

ACROSS THE TRACKS

Sooky lives across the tracks—Sooky and his dog. Sooky is a ragamuffin sort of kid. And his dog is a sort of ragamuffin animal. But both are important factors in Skippy's life.

The villain of the piece is the dog-catcher, who takes away Sooky's dog. And the hero, after he gets the boy's viewpoint, is Skippy's father. It is he who finally "socks" the dog-catcher in the jaw and restores Skippy's faith in his father and in grown-up humanity in general.

GREAT LITTLE ACTORS

A Columnist's Secretary Makes a Few Notes

"Dear WW: The Maj. Kennelly (of the New York Athletic Club) story finally broke in the mornings. Most of them reported that the first anyone knew he planned to wed again was his application for a marriage license. I think you used it over six weeks ago. . . . You asked me to remind you to get a haircut today . . . The barber in the building has marked you down today . . . Cora LaRedd, of the Cotton Club, phoned to say that you shouldn't forget to call her 'The Black Garbo' in your notice . . . The desk wanted Betty Compton's private phone number. I told them I'd have to ask you first . . . Please notice the pictures you wanted framed are on the wall. You owe me $4.

"Gertrude Lawrence sent you a wire saying that she had a blood transfusion and has American blood now and that she is getting better and that she has gained seven pounds . . . Oh, yes, and she sends her love . . . The Marshall Field Company, which is using a photo of you in its kerchief ad, is sending a proof of it—the photo is a still from the Vitaphone short . . . The Rialto marquee lights quote your 'Front Page' blurb . . . The female driver you wrote about in 'Portrait' called and is sore . . . I smiled him away.

"'Dirigible' opens at the Central Friday—tickets are in your second drawer left . . . The tickets for the children Saturday are in your name . . . King Features promotion dep't is using that picture you hate—the one with Chevalier . . . I think you'd better ask for a new file, the others are crowded terribly . . . What'll I do with your old hat? . . . The check from Dance didn't come yet. . . . Call Buddy McLarnin at Cir 1569 . . . Do you think you will use any of that old mail which is piling up? . . . It is material of no especial value—several second rate poems and some awful similes and puns . . . A lad who wouldn't leave his name phoned, but wants to talk to you, says he knows the 'anonymous' author of 'Night Nurse' and 'Ex-Mistress.'

"Sinclair Lewis, who quit the Harcourt, Brace Company, has signed with Doubleday, Doran . . . Someone connected with the Lido phoned and said they all would appreciate it very much if you would make it clear that Helen Morgan doesn't open at the old Lido on 52nd and 7th, but at the new Lido on the site of the former Belleau, near the Alvin Theater . . . The opening date is April 7 . . . You haven't very much Saturday stuff in the desk—or is it because there isn't anything else you never knew till now? . . . Do you think I'll ever see 'Private Lives?' . . . The foreman of the press-room wanted a pair for some show. I took care of him . . . Jeff Machamer gives you a plug in his piece in the new College Humor. . . . Incidentally, Swanson, the editor of it, fooled you and all his friends. Remember he told you he would be married on April Fools' Day? . . . That must have been a gag especially for you—because he has been secretly married since January! Is your face red?

"I get more silly phone calls before you get in about: 'Where is Ruth Etting playing now?' . . . Or 'What have you against Rudy Vallee that you keep picking on him?' . . . All right, where the deuce is La Etting playing now and why don't you lay off Mr. Vallee? . . . I bought that Jack Hylton record of 'Gigolo' you mentioned in Monday's. It is delightful . . . I think you really ought to answer that letter from Simon and Schuster—it has been here for weeks. What shall I tell them? . . . Did you write a review on the Palace this week? I didn't see one . . . I heard a terrible story last night about how you and Mark got those hockey players plastered.

"Didn't you tell me that Josephine Larkin bawled you out for publishing that item about that Wall street chap being altar-bound with a society girl, because she was going to be the bride? . . . Then how come that yarn in the papers about her going to marry some British nobleman? . . . Tell me the 'low' on that one. It sounds amusing already . . . Oh, yes, more dopes are calling up because in Monday's you had it Gilbert Seldes instead of George Seldes, his brother . . . I caught it for the last edition, but they wouldn't understand . . . However, you gummed up Max Rosen (Nanette Guilford's ex) by calling him Phil . . . Phil is your insurance agent. Be careful . . . I suppose you noticed how our neighbor on 42d Street keeps going after Charles Augustus since he refused to let the tabs publish the photo of the ba-bee . . . In the Rockne story they keep mentioning the fact that Lindy was once technical advisor or something for the firm that made the plane. . . . You newspapermen are such cads at times.

"Why did you run that terribly old one about the railroad vet with the hammer? I know, I know—you'll alibi that you headed it: 'Not New, but Clean' . . . Makes no difference—too old and not so comical, anyhow. You can tell Lou Holtz for me, also . . . How does that one go again about the two dialecticians who went to Chicago for a one-night stand? . . . I don't get the point about the fellow saying: 'Don't answer me NOW!' . . . You'll have to draw pictures with that one, I'm afraid . . . You might get some copy out of that distinguished old gent who is usually with Fontana, of Moss and Fontana, the Casino in the Park dancers . . . It seems he has a white mustache and raised Fontana since he was 8, sort of father, benefactor . . . His name is Gaston de Ravenel . . . They are saving a box at the circus for Mrs. W. and the children.

"This will kill you . . . Lane, who sends you contributions now and then and keeps asking you to take out more insurance, especially accident, was in a motor crash recently and will have scars to show for it . . . And he carries no accident insurance. Haw! . . . 'This Week on Long Island' is the name of a new throwaway, given free by the Long Island R. R. . . . The editor is Marie Armstrong, former wife of Ben Hecht . . . She is also the literary editor—and does she hand a left-handed compliment to Hecht's book, 'A Jew in Love?' . . . She says in part that it contains some of Hecht's finest writing, but that there are whole pages she had to skip . . . Meow!

"Miss Guinan phoned and wants you to think up some blackouts for her act . . . It is due at Loew's State after New Haven—whenever that is . . . She says Dave Stamper has written a song for her to the tune of 'Mr. Dooley' in which you are joshed plenty, and that you should think of a sketch or so to go with the song. . . . Pidgeon, in the Press, mentions you . . . The Jewish Theatrical Guild called to say that Mayor Walker has accepted the guest of honor role for their dinner on the 12th and that a spot is reserved for you . . . You have an opening tonight at the Vanderbilt—curtain at 8:50, I think . . . I forgot to put in a new typewriter ribbon—will do so today sometime. Please forgive—won't you? . . . You won't? . . . There isn't much news to tell you—just a dull day—Ruth."

OUR DANCING HEROINE EARNS ONE DIME IN STANLEY

By CLARENCE E. GRUNDISH

"Ten Cents a Dance," inspired by the song that Ruth Etting originally sang in the recent Ed Wynn show, is the new picture in the Stanley. And please note it is the song and not the picture that is the inspiration.

The film has Barbara Stanwyck as its special star and Ricardo Cortez and Monroe Owsley are the principal men.

Miss Stanwyck is cast as one of the hostesses in a public dance hall. She earns one thin dime for dancing with a sailor boy, gets a hundred dollar for just chatting with a rich gentleman and marries a poor, spineless chap, who turns out to be a cad.

The story lacks an air of sincerity. Even though she pays Poor Man's room rent and gets him a job, and he sets a black eye on her behalf, there doesn't seem to be any good reason for their marrying. The idea that they're in love somehow doesn't get across.

SECRET WORTH KNOWING

We doubt, too, if rich gentlemen are as ready to hand out $5,000 bankrolls to pretty ladies whom they love just because pretty ladies' husbands happen to be in a jam. But that's the way it happens in this flicker.

And how the movies keep small pieces of cracked ice for highball purposes all night without melting is a secret that would be worth knowing in these Volstead days.

Be all this as it may, our dance hall heroine wakes up to find that all poor men aren't honest and heroic and that all rich men aren't philanderers. So the rainbow shines for disillusioned Barbara at the finale.

There are some silent moments in the film. They look like another gesture on the part of Pa Pitt's censors to make virtue ever triumphant.

AN UNPOPULAR ROLE

The role Mr. Owsley plays is so unsympathetic that it is likely to make him quite the unpopular fellow. Mr. Ricardo gives a nice portraval as the man with the bankroll and Miss Stanwyck struggles courageously with her little dance hall girl, who didn't have sense enough to marry the courteous rich man in the first place.

Moss and Fry, Negro comics, steal the spotlight in the stage show, "Spring Frolic." How many songs in a piano? they ask. The answer is, as near as we can figure out, the two numbers they offer—"Ol' Man River" and another one—which get a lot of applause. Ray Teal is "guesting" it as master of ceremonies. And it looks like these gentlemen are in for a rough season. Nell Kelly nearly killed Dick Powell last week and now Peggy Bernier puts on a face-slapping act with Mr. Teal's face. Other entertainers are on the bill and other entertainment includes organlogue and overture. Highlight of the overture is the singing of the St. Patrick's Church Boys' Choir

FAST KEATON COMEDY SCORES HIT ON ALDINE SCREEN

By MARGARET RUSSELL

Buster Keaton, talking in the fast-moving farce, "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," on the Aldine screen, is not the Buster Keaton of pantomime days. Charles Chaplin is a wise man, to keep silent.

But what he has lost in his silent art, Keaton makes up for in rapid action and hilarity of situation. He is well cast as a dumb dud who falls for a woman who craves a Don Juan.

Reginald Denny is Mr. Fixit, who provides comical complications to further his own romantic purpose. Charlotte Greenwood is Keaton's gymnastic instructress in the art of love-making. Natalie Moorehead has her sleek blonde hair mussed for probably the first time in cinema history.

"The Sheik of Araby," a hodgepodge of 55 stars, is worth seeing. Also a Grantland Rice Sportlight of skiing on water and snow.

"Public Improvements Promote Progress"

The improvement to Turtle Creek and Monroeville Hill Road, which will be completed this year, involved the reconstruction of an old County Road which has been a source of heavy maintenance during the past years. It is being reconstructed from James Street in Turtle Creek Borough to the intersection of the Turtle Creek and Monroeville Valley Road.

The total length of the improvement is 2.14 miles. The section within Turtle Creek Borough is 0.12 miles long and is of a 10x8x10-inch cross-section of reinforced concrete 30 feet wide between curbs. The section of the road in Patton Township is of reinforced concrete 9 inches thick at the edges, 7 inches thick at center and 18 feet in width.

This contract was awarded to the Allegheny Construction Company on September 9, 1930. It will be completed in 1931 and the source of county funds was the 1928 PEOPLES BOND ISSUE.

HEAD BANKERS OF AMERICA ON TRIAL

Financiers of New York Cannot Be Said to Be Equal to Responsibilities

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER
Universal Service.

NEW YORK, April 4.—American bankers, as custodians of the world's largest pile of gold, are on trial as financial leaders.

Since economic primacy shifted as a result of war and post-war changes from London to New York, it cannot be glibly asserted that New York financiers have been fully equal to their newly won responsibilities. London in the last two years has dropped to third place as a gold center, surpassed by Paris as well as New York. Gold and financial power have gravitated from the experienced control of London bankers to the direction of less experienced men in New York and Paris.

Mr. Rukeyser.

WORLD PAYS

The world has paid a price in credit readjustment in the last two years for the redistribution of gold. Presumably, an important theme, which Montague Norman, governor of the Bank of England, came over to discuss with George L. Harrison, governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York; Eugene Meyer, Jr., governor of the Federal Reserve Board, and Andrew W. Mellon, Treasury head, is the desirability of central bank co-operation to use the world's supply of monetary gold effectively for the rehabilitation of international credit.

Less reticent than the bank officials, the brilliant, if heterodox British economist, J. M. Keynes, condemns the alleged lack of financial leadership and calls upon British financiers to resume "the vacant financial leadership of the world."

URGES ACTION

"I, who opposed Britain's return to the gold standard and can claim, fortunately, that my Cassandra utterances have been partly fulfilled, believe that London's exchange position should be relentlessly defended today in order, above all that she may resume the vacant financial leadership of the world, which no one else has the experience or the public spirit to occupy, speaking out of acknowledged strength and not out of weakness."

Mr. Keynes believes that foreign observers have underestimated Britain's fiscal reserve power, saying in the New Republic:

"British national finance has a very high card in hand in the shape of tariff (for revenue) which we shall certainly employ if necessary. The second is the tremendous strength of the Bank of England, which also has its cards in hand—and its powder dry."

INDIA SILVER IMPORTS OFF

WASHINGTON, April 4.—Silver imports into India during the seven days ending March 27 totaled 27,000 ounces, all of which came from London, says a dispatch to the Department of Commerce from its Bombay office. During the eight days ending March 20, imports totaled 177,000 ounces.

The total offtake for the seven days ending March 27 was 490 bars, as compared with 770 bars for the eight days ending March 20. Silver stocks on March 27 were estimated at 11,500 bars, as compared with 12,000 bars on March 20.

Currency in reserve on March 22 totaled 1,162,800,000 rupees, as compared with 1,159,300,000 rupees on March 15. Bullion in reserve on March 22 totaled 67,100,000 rupees, as compared with 66,800,000 rupees on March 15.

March Construction Awards Increase

NEW YORK, April 4. — Engineering construction contracts awarded throughout the country in the first quarter totaled $663,083,000, a decrease of 15 per cent from the first three months of 1930, says Engineering News-Record. However, March awards of $247,346,000 showed a substantial gain over the February valuation of $178,542,000.

SEASONAL TREND MAY BE REVERSED

By JOHN H. VAN DEVENTER

In normal times business has a seasonal downward trend which begins with the end of the first quarter of the year and extends into the summer. This year, however, it appears as if the seasonal trend may be reversed.

One reason for this is that we have been bumping along on the bottom for so many months that there is only one direction in which business can go and that is up. But there are better reasons for the expectation than that one.

One of them is the encouraging experience of the automobile industry. People are buying cars and that is reflecting itself in operating rates and in employment, as well as in orders for steel and other materials. Each week brings more definite indications of a sustained increase in the motor car business. The February output of 230,364 cars was the largest in six months. And observers are agreed that the peak month in auto production this year will be as late as June or even July. This will be a big help to all industries and business in reversing the usual seasonal decline.

Road building and outdoor construction begins to speed up with the melting of the snow and the coming of favorable weather. An unusual amount of summer activity is certain in these lines this year. The construction of natural gas pipe lines will also proceed apace, and these projects call for vast tonnages of steel as well as much outdoor construction labor.

Home building has also taken an upward turn at last, after a long period of decline. The slump in this began a full year before the stock market crash.

The contract for the construction of the huge Hoover dam, awarded two weeks ago, will stimulate considerable activity and start some 48 millions of dollars rolling.

We can be very thankful that the increase in business during the past two months has been very gradual. Had it been a sudden upturn, a summer slump would have been almost unavoidable. And that would have been very discouraging. As it is, we may reasonably hope that no dips will be met on the upward incline.

Freight Claims Take Drop In 1930

WASHINGTON, April 4.—Freight claims paid in 1930 by the Class I railroads of the United States for loss and damage to freight shipments, totaled $34,974,056, according to complete reports for the year just received from the carriers by the freight claim division of the American Railway Association.

The amount of freight claims paid by the Class I railroads in 1930 was the smallest for any year since 1916 and was a reduction of $1,139,847, or 3.2 per cent under those paid in 1929.

On the basis of the total number of cars loaded with revenue freight, however, loss and damage claims paid by the railroads in 1930 averaged 78 cents per car, compared with 68 cents in 1929.

I. B. M. PROFITS SHOW GAIN

NEW YORK, April 4.—Profits of International Business Machines Corporation for January and February, after federal taxes, were more than 5 per cent in excess of those for the corresponding 1930 months, continuing the growth which made earnings for the 1930 year the largest in the company's history, Thomas J. Watson, president of the company, told directors at the regular monthly meeting. He said:

"Based on information gathered by our representatives in all parts of the United States and abroad, there are unmistakable indications of business improvement which should shortly be reflected in a better demand for merchandise of all kinds."

BUSINESS INDEX UNCHANGED

NEW YORK, April 4.—The beginning of the second quarter brings no break in the monotonous movement of business along the bottom on which it has been bumping for five months, says the Business Week in its report covering the week ended today. The spring stimulus has been scarcely more than seasonal, and the index, after allowance for this factor, so far shows no certain sign of rise from a level about 20 per cent below normal, for the week ended March 28. This compares with 81.1 per cent in the week preceding and 93.0 per cent in the same week last year.

Steel has lost a little of its momentum, as it usually does after March, and automobile output is increasingly cautious. But electric power production reflects a slow growth in general industrial activity, construction is encouragingly active, and carloadings suggest an increasing movement of merchandise for spring trade. Best of all, the drought is routed and crops are promising. But declining stock and commodity prices, weakening bond markets and chronic credit contraction show continued lack of business and banking confidence here and abroad.

Although a critical period for early business recovery is approaching there is still no hint of any major move to hasten it. With all Europe embarked upon an international "race for starvation" through wage-cuttitng, and our financial interests still seeking salvation overseas rather than in domestic development, American standards hang in the balance and need bracing with a bit of business backbone.

GLASS TRADE MARKED BY INACTIVITY

Plate Glass Branch of Industry Best Situated; Market Conditions Poor

The flat glass industry has continued for another week without any change of importance, according to National Glass Budget. Prominent manufacturing firms say that inquiries for various kinds of glass are becoming more frequent, but the actual placing of orders continues at a slow pace. A feature that lends some encouragement to the situation, which has now been dragging along for almost a year, is that the mental frame of mind of those who are interested in the industry is improving.

Production of the various kinds of sheet glass is at a new low level. Seldom if ever has the factory output of window glass been lower at the first of April than at present. This statement can safely be made covering the era of machine production. In most plants there are only enough machines operating to keep stocks filled up with popular sizes. Several of the window glass manufacturing plants are closed down and are likely to remain inactive until stocks on hand are moved.

IDLE PLANTS GAIN

Production of rough rolled glass is far below the yearly average at the first of April. It is reported that there are more idle plants in this branch of the industry than perhaps ever before at the beginning of April. It is not generally expected that there will be any decided pickup in demand for rough glass products for some time to come. New construction work will have to be completed before there will be any lasting improvement.

The plate glass branch is situated better than any of the others. At that, demand this year is considerably below what it generally is at the end of the first quarter of the year.

Market conditions in all branches of the industry are said to be unchanged. As long as the demand is off it is a difficult task to stabilize markets. In this respect the plate glass industry finds itself in the more enviable position. The window glass market is not as firm as it should be, while that of the rough rolled glass is tending towards stabilization.

SERVICE RECORD ESTABLISHED

WASHINGTON, April 4.—A new all-time record for the number of commercial services rendered to American firms and individuals by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce was established during the week ended March 7, when such services totaled 89,464, according to R. H. Brasel, chief of the correspondence division.

Records for services rendered have been established and superseded with recurring frequency during the past few years, it was stated. The previous high record was established during the week ended February 7, when 85,236 were provided.

The large number of requests for services of all kinds which are now reaching the bureau are not occasioned by any special circumstance, but are a continuance of the growth in the utilization of the bureau's services which have been evident for the past several years and which have recently increased in proportion to the enlarged domestic commerce activities of the bureau.

Goodyear Reduces Wages of Workers

AKRON, April 14.—Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company officials announced that a reclassification of wage scales now under way will result in pay cuts of from 5 to 20 per cent for 13,000 workmen. The largest cuts will be made on unskilled labor, where the base rate is now 65 cents an hour, the smallest on skilled jobs, where the pay is 90 to 92 cents an hour.

Goodyear officials declare the reclassification was worked out after a study of hourly earnings in other important industries as compared with rubber.

INGOT OUTPUT TAKES DROP OF 3%

Capacity Basis of Mill Operations Appears to Be Somewhat Indefinite

By B. E. V. LUTY

After the 50 per cent increase in the rate of steel ingot production registered up to a fortnight ago, over the December rate, there has been a decrease in the last couple weeks in the neighborhood of 3 per cent, Production of all classes of ingots in December was at about 24,200,000 tons a year. Three weeks ago a rough forecast was made, that March would show a rate of about 37,000,000 tons. While such a rate was probably attained for a few days the chances now are that the official report will show an average for the month slightly under that figure, but still about 50 per cent or more above the December rate.

Ingot capacity at the last ascertainment, for December 31, 1929, was 63,000,000 tons, while prospective capacity is about 69,000,000 tons. Some estimates are made that "mill operations" are at about 55 per cent, but the capacity basis appears to be somewhat indefinite.

AUTO DEMAND OFF

The 50 per cent increase in two and a half months was less promising than appeared on the face, because December witnessed a great shaking out, the particularly low rate not being a good criterion as to conditions then existing. There can be no criticism of the higher rate recently attained that more sail was put on than could be carried. Last year on the contrary there was ground for criticism, an unnecessarily high rate having been reached in February.

A small exception to this generalization needs to be made in connection with the automobile industry, in which production has been increasing, but not as rapidly as anticipated, whereby the buying of a month and more ago left some stocks of steel and parts to be liquidated. In the last couple weeks there has been a curtailment in the production of automobile steel, but this is only temporary as automobile production is still engaged in a long range increase. The best guess seems to be that May will be the high month in automobile production as it has been occasionally in the past, April being a more common month. The low month was November when almost invariably December had been the low month.

STRUCTURAL ORDERS

Radio is an assured permanancy and so is the Pennsylvania Railroad. On behalf of these two activities 250,000 tons of fabricated structural steel has been placed in the last three weeks, 125,000 tons for Radio City and 124,900 tons for railroad electrification between New York and Washington. Obviously this business should not be spoken of as indicating confidence in the future that these facilities will be needed, since that could be taken for granted. The information to be derived is that in the judgment of the projectors it would not pay to defer the construction work in a wait for lower costs.

The business is particularly welcome to the structural fabricating industry because the flow of contracts had been running rather thin since September 1 though there was a fair volume. Speaking of depressions, it is a very important point to note that while past depressions were commonly preceded by, and in part caused by, a decrease in construction work, the records of fabricated structural steel lettings show that lettings were heavier in the first half of 1929 than in 1928, although that had been a record year, and then in the next four months, through the month of the stock market panic, there was a further increase in lettings, all of jobs it would take more or less time to execute. The depression did not come on by investors in construction work withdrawing. It came through action of the rank and file of the people curtailing their activities, necessarily it is to be presumed, it being the people at large, not capitalists, that make demand for automobiles, neckties, houses, radio, etc.

Forbes

Willing Easter Shoppers Find Stores' Stocks Run Down.

By B. C. FORBES

Mr. Forbes

EASTER RETAIL trade in New York, I learn, has been quite brisk. Shoppers have had more to complain about than merchants.

Many stores are declared to be undermanned, causing vexatious waits. Also, women say that assortments have been allowed to run down annoyingly, particularly in higher-priced lines. This complaint I have heard so often that I am convinced it must be true. "They want to sell from samples," is a common comment. This doesn't apply only to articles running into big money, but to wearing apparel of the better class.

Will the gratifying volume of Easter buying encourage merchants to change their niggardly policies?

SOME OF the recent selling of stocks has come from wealthy sources. The market rose faster than business during January and February. Influential sellers are willing to take a chance on being able to rebuy at lower prices before summer ends.

GOV. BENJAMIN STRONG of the New York Federal Reserve Bank loved to surround everything he did with the darkest secrecy. Whenever the governor of the Bank of England, Montague Norman, visited this country, a Chinese wall was raised around him. All of which did nothing but incite suspicions, wild rumors and resentment.

Gov. George L. Harrison unfortunately is making the mistake of following his predecessor's example. Once again the eminent London banker is more hedged about with secrecy and safeguards than visiting royalty. Both Harrison and Norman act as if they were "up to" something momentous, about which the American public must be kept entirely in the dark.

THE TRUTH is that the Federal Reserve authorities should realize that their past methods have utterly failed to earn the confidence of the American people. Gov. Harrison in New York, as well as Gov. Eugene Meyer in Washington, should change their tactics. They should exert themselves, not to treat the public like children, but to do everything within their power to try to regain public confidence.

Gov. Meyer has had an excellent record in the past in the matter of aboveboardness in his public activities. But has the traditional attitude of the Reserve Board infected him?

Be yourself, Eugene!

THE DOMESTIC refrigeration industry is blossoming. Frigidaire plants are going full-tilt. The New York distributor of General Electric refrigerators reports business running more than fifty per cent ahead of last year. A. M. Taylor, of Kelvinator, tells me:

"We are in a happy frame of mind. Both February and March shipments are way ahead of last year and we are highly confident that we are going to attain our ambitious spring program. Our advertising and sales promotion schedules are the largest in Kelvinator history."

PRESIDENT GORDON C. CORBALEY, of the American Institute of Food Distribution, sends this observation:

"The decline in business has run its course and is now history. The problem now facing all of us is how to do a more satisfactory business this year than last year. About 15 per cent of the people depending on wages had a discouraging year. Most of the other workers had a better than normal year because they could buy more with the money they received. The majority of all business in 1930 had a year that would have been called prosperous if we had not been comparing it with the standards of 1927, 1928 and 1929.

"Now it is time to quit talking about the pains and symptoms which afflicted so many people for so many months after the joy ride ended. We are doing business on the levels of 1931, and the question of prosperity and business comfort will be largely an individual matter that each man and each industry will have to work out for itself."

"The fact exists that from many fundamental standpoints the progress of last year was important and will have an influence on the future fully equal to years when the financial return was greater. Higher standards of efficiency with greater effectiveness have been established than ever existed before. The basis exists, therefore, for a more effective capitalization of the corporation's future opportunities, and the management has faith in the fact that the opportunities of the future are as great as those of the past."

Adversity does have its uses, even though they are at the time bitter rather than sweet. Never fear that the U. S. A. will by and by prosper more than ever before.

BAD WEATHER CURBS SALES AT RETAIL

Approach of Easter and Extensive Advertising Liven Trade Somewhat

Retail trade has been stimulated to some extent due to the near approach of Easter and extensive advertising, according to R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review. Weather conditions, however, have not been very favorable and distribution has not been quite up to expectations.

Jobbers of dry goods report business quiet, while there has been greater activity in women's wearing apparel and boys' and children's clothing, but the increase in men's wear lines has been small. Seasonal hardware is moving slightly better, but regular lines and builders' hardware continue to move slowly. Jobbers of groceries and provisions report a considerable volume of business being handled but at unsatisfactory prices. Building construction continues well below normal, and demand for lumber and building materials has shown but little improvement.

COLLECTIONS SLOW

There has been but little change in sanitary and heating equipment and plumbing supply lines, which continue to move rather slowly. While some fairly good orders have been received by manufacturers of electrical equipment, the volume of business continues materially lower than a year ago. Manufacturers of paints and varnishes are estimated to be running at about 80 per cent of capacity, which is at a lower rate than prevailed a year ago.

Production of crude oil shows a light increase, while demand for refined products is showing a slight improvement. Bituminous coal is now averaging around 7,000,000 tons per week, which rate is about 10 per cent lower than prevailed last year at this time, and demand continues quiet.

Slowness continues to predominate in the local collection situation although a few retailers are paying their bills more promptly.

ZONITE PROFIT TOPS NEEDS

NEW YORK, April 4.—Zonite Products Corporation in the first three months of this year covered the quarter's dividend requirement of 25 cents a share with a margin of more than 50 per cent. With its development and initial expansion stages past, the corporation now is in a position to benefit from last year's consolidation program.

During 1930, the corporation considerably strengthened its position in the medical preparation field. In February of that year it purchased for $215,000 the New Brunswick (N. J.) plant of the Reichardt Cocoa and Chocolate Company and in it concentrated its own and subsidiary companies' manufacturing operations. Zonite, Forhan's toothpaste and antiseptic, Argyrol and Larvex now are all produced in the same plant.

Three Men Arrested In Road House Raid

GREENSBURG, Pa., April 4.—Three men were arrested by county detectives who staged a raid on the Moon Beam Inn, a road house on the Lincoln highway in Hempfield Township west of here.

The men, Frank Reitz, of Jeannette, alleged proprietor; David McDonald, of Akron, O., and Peter Pintanida, of Herrin, Ill., all disclaimed ownership of seven gallons of whisky found in the place.

Salem Police Chief Criticized, Resigns

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., April 4.—Because criticism had been made that he had enforced traffic and prohibition laws too drastically, Corwin Brohard, former Salem College football star, announced his resignation as police chief of Salem.

At the same time announcement was made of the appointment of his father, Milroy Brohard, as his successor for the unexpired term.

Bad Check Suspect Held in Monessen

GREENSBURG, Pa., April 4.—Alleged to have been passing worthless checks in the Irwin and Monessen districts, Troy Golden, alias Charles S. Jones, has been arrested by Monessen police.

Fayette County authorities also report they want Golden on similar charges.

CHARTING SHOWING TRADE ACTIVITY

Graph by U. S. Department of Commerce.

Some Signs of Gains Become Apparent

By GEORGE H. SNYDER

BUSINESS IS STILL DRIFTING. Conclusive evidence of a definite trend either for better or worse is lacking, but there have been a few signs of improved conditions.

Charts prepared by the Department of Commerce showing activity in the major types of business indicate in some cases that activity in the present year is getting closer to the pace of 12 months ago. In most lines there has been a slight upward trend since January 1.

The charts show that bituminous coal production, which in January and February was far below last year, is now only slightly below the 1930 rate and in one week recently it actually exceeded the corresponding period of last year.

Car Loadings Gain

THE GRAPH ON FREIGHT car loadings showed the volume of traffic moving to be on a practically even keel from the middle of January to the middle of February. A slump then took place which has since been followed by a sharp upturn. More recent figures from some of the leading rail systems indicate that this year's line on the chart is getting much closer to that of last year.

Building contracts are showing new signs of life. They made one of the sharpest upturns of any line of activity. This has been reflected particularly in the demand for structural steel.

More Steel Produced

STEEL INGOT PRODUCTION has shown the most steady rate of gain. Figures published since the government chart was drawn up indicate that there has been a pause in the uptrend, but the rate of increase in this industry over the present year has been moving the 1931 line on the chart nearer to the 1930 line.

Lumber output also has been improving, but the seasonal increase has not been as great this year as it was last year.

The rise in Detroit factory employment is an especially encouraging sign. The gain has not been large during recent weeks. This is probably due to the fact that the automobile industry has been exceptionally cautious about building cars until there has been definite assurance that they can be readily sold by dealers.

Prices Steadier

WHILE COMMODITY PRICES have not turned upward, they have been on a practically even keel since the beginning of the year, which is in marked contrast to the steady declines shown during 1930.

Business failures reached alarming proportions in January, but the number of casualties has been steadily declining and now is at practically the level of last year.

Bond prices have been consistently higher this year than last year, although the unusually heavy volume of new offerings during recent weeks has been a discouraging factor in the market. The sale of several new issues has been temporarily postponed pending the liquidation of unsold securities on dealers' shelves.

Beaver Church Plans Dedication Easter

BEAVER, Pa., April 4.—The new $100,000 Sunday school building will be dedicated and the enlarged auditorium will be formally opened by the congregation of the First United Presbyterian Church at exercieses Easter morning. The Rev. Dr. John McNaugher, president of the Pittsburgh-Zenia Theological Seminary, Pittsburgh, will make the address at 11 o'clock.

Kellogg Departs For League Court

NEW YORK, April 4.—(AP.)—Frank B. Kellogg, former secretary of state, sailed last night on the Olympic, en route to The Hague to attend the forthcoming session of the League Court, of which he is one of the judges. He was accompanied by Mrs. Kellogg.

Two Wells May Give Somerset Gas Supply

SOMERSET, Pa., April 4.—A gas well, with a flow of 2,000,000 cubic feet per day, was brought in on the William H. Miller farm, near Stoyestown. The well is the second brought in by a company of Somerset businessmen, one of 1,000,000 cubic feet production having been struck last May.

The gas probably will be piped to Somerset, which at present has no natural gas. The two wells will be sufficient to supply a town of 10,000, officials claimed.

WOOL MARKET TRADE FAIR

BOSTON, April 4.—The Commercial Bulletin says: There has been a fair business in the wool market this past week, but mostly prior to April 1. Sales have included a little of everything and prices have been well maintained throughout the list, especially on scoured wools. Greasy wools have been merely steady.

London closed Tuesday with prices at the top and generally 15 to 20 per cent above the January series on merinos and 15 to 25 per cent higher on crossbreds. The primary markets abroad have been closed mostly this week.

In the West, shearing is spreading gradually northward. There has been purchases in Central California, Southern Idaho, Nevada, Arizona and Ohio in larger or smaller amounts at prices nearly equivalent to Boston parity. Some contracting has taken place around Lakeview, Ore.

Prosecutor Ends Bank Crash Inquiry

SHARON, Pa., April 4.—Although investigation showed irregularities, no evidence was discovered that persons other than Ralph E. Matthews, secretary-treasurer, were connected with the taking of $176,000 funds of the defunct Dollar Title and Trust Company, District Attorney Leo H. McKay has announced. McKay has ended his special investigation of the bank's failure.

Banking officials have announced it is probable 90 per cent will be repaid to depositors.

Jury Upholds Officer In Slaying Suspect

LOS ANGELES, April 4.—(AP.)—A coroner's jury exonerated Frank Lawrence, private patrolman, who shot and killed George Gale Bandy, ex-convict and fugitive from Wisconsin, April 1. The jury described the slaying as justifiable.

Lawrence testified he shot Bandy, alias C. R. Parker as he fled from a clothing store shortly before dawn with a heavily laden sample case. Bandy's companion escaped.

Detention Preferred To Hunt for Work

BROWNSVILLE, Pa., April 4.—Floyd Truxall, 17, Brownsville, prefers the George Junior Republic Detention School to freedom and the task of searching for employment.

He fled the school two weeks ago. Unable to find a job he informed relatives here to notify officials of the institution that he was ready to go back. Police arrested him here yesterday.

Highway Extension Urged by Emsworth

Extension of the Ohio River Boulevard from its present terminus at the Camp Horne road at Emsworth to the Beaver County line at Leetsdale was approved by Emsworth Council. A committee to urge adoption of the plan by other Ohio River communities was appointed.

ST. LOUIS OIL MEET CALLED APRIL 15

Gathering Will Mark 70th Anniversary of Petroleum Refining in This Country

NEW YORK, April 4.—The first mid-year meeting of the American Petroleum Institute's Division of Refining, to be held in the Statler Hotel at St. Louis, April 15 and 16, approximately will mark the seventieth anniversary of petroleum refining as an industry in this country.

While the science of oil refining is centuries old and the first large commercial refinery in the world is believed to have been built at Baku in 1823, actually the modern petroleum refining industry dates back only to 1861. It was early in that year that William Barnsdall and William H. Abbott began operations in a new $15,000 oil refining plant on the bank of Oil Creek, a mile north of Titusville, Pa.

INDUSTRY EXPANDS

Production from the first American commercial oil well, the Drake well, located on the bank of the same creek, started in August, 1859. Barnsdall and Abbott started construction of their refinery in November, 1860. They hauled stills, pipe and other equipment overland some 27 miles, overcame numerous obstacles, legal and otherwise, and finally on January 22, 1861, lighted the first fire under their stills.

Since that time the American petroleum industry has expanded until today this country, with its more than 400 refineries, has greater refining facilities and output than all the rest of the world. Its products rank fifth in value of all the manufactured goods made in the United States and lead all in volume of railroad freight shipments. These refineries now produce more than 400,000,000 barrels of gasoline yearly, as well as millions of barrels of lubricating and other oils needed for the present machine age.

EARLY EXPERIMENTS

Early as were Barnsdall and Abbott in the field, petroleum refining had begun in this country in a small way around 1855, through experiments made by Dr. Samuel Kier in the hope of transforming his petroleum "medicinal oils" into more valuable products. In fact, as far back as 1850 refineries had been established, and between that year and 1860 they increased rapidly in number. But they were plants occupied in manufacturing so-called "paraffine oils" from coal and shale. When Kier demonstrated that these products more easily and cheaply could be refined from crude oil, and the early Pennsylvania wells began producing a flood of crude and the Barnsdall plant established its place in the economic picture, the coal and shale refineries were forced to change their processes to accommodate the refining of petroleum.

Good Demand in Textile Industry

NEW YORK, April 4.—Textile World reports that March was marked by a good demand for spot and nearby delivery merchandise, but by less active inquiry for future contracts. Continual diminishing of stocks is indicated by the firmness of prices when spot delivery is wanted in comparison with figures possible when June or later shipments will do. Gray goods used in fabrics for women's dresses have been the most active sellers in March.

Arnold Men Accused In Theft, Slugging

GREENSBURG, Pa., April 4.—Identified as the man who slugged Charles Remakis, of Arnold, and took $25 cash from him, John Paladino, 22, of Arnold, has been arrested by police. He was committed to jail here on a robbery charge.

Points of Interest

A recent referendum developed the fact that the most popular point of interest in Pittsburgh is Carnegie Institute, in Schenley Park. Other interesting things to see are, in the order of their popularity: Liberty Bridge and Liberty Tubes; Old Block House near The Point; Mt. Washington Roadway; Civic Center near Schenley Park; Point Bridge with a view of the junction of the Allegheny and Monongahela Rivers as they form the Ohio River; the residential districts in the South Hills, East End, and North Boroughs; and the Inclined Planes. Directions for reaching these may be had at the Information Desk of the Chamber of Commerce.

DRYS ARREST 6 IN RUM RAIDS

Edward Flaherty, 27, arrested by prohibition agents yesterday in a raid on a second-floor club at 232 Third avenue, where six pints of whisky and a large quantity of home brew were seized, was being held for a hearing before the United States Commissioner today, according to the agents.

The agents raided a building at 1632 Steuben street, after seizing a truck alleged to have been driven by Gip Constantina, 32, of 1314 Webster avenue, which they reported, contained 145 gallons of moonshine. In the building, the raiders said they confiscated a 250-gallon still, 2,800 pounds of corn sugar and destroyed 3,000 gallons of mash. Harry Abbott, 36, was arrested in the building, agents declared.

An automobile with six pints of whisky was seized in the 1400 block of Epiphany street. The driver escaped.

Mrs. Emma Hall, 37, and August Vogel, 47, were arrested in a raid on the second floor of 109 Smithfield street, where, agents said, moonshine was confiscated.

A pint of whisky was reported seized at 431 Water street, where Herman Zimmerman, 50, and Mrs. Margaret Zimmerman, 38, were arrested, it was reported.

Liquor law violations also were reported in raids on six dwellings, two in North Belle Vernon, one in Glendale and three in the city.

U. S. BUILDING EXPERT HERE

Maj. Robert A. Greenfield, of Washington, a construction engineer for the supervising architect, United States Treasury Department, is in Pittsburgh to supervise the erection of the new $8,000,000 Postoffice and Federal Building, Seventh avenue and Grant street. He has established a temporary office in the present Postoffice Building, but later will have an office at the site of the proposed structure.

Maj. Greenfield would make no comment on the question of the placing of ramps or approaches to the new building, which have been a matter of much controversy between city and federal authorities, other than say that no plans for such work have been submitted to him.

The government engineer said that the excavation work is progressing favorably and the date for starting to lay the foundation will depend upon weather conditions.

Maj. Greenfield is a World War veteran, having served overseas with an engineering regiment. Since then he has engaged in a number of government building projects.

MISSING GIRLS FOUND IN CITY

After an absence of almost a week, two Tarentum sisters were back home today, having been found yesterday by county detectives in a rooming house in lower Penn avenue.

The sisters, Hilda and Anna Berringer, 17 and 16 respectively, of 100 West Eleventh avenue, ran away, detectives say, last Saturday. Hilda, employed as a domestic in Natrona Heights, disappeared first and her younger sister vanished several hours later.

In connection with their absence, county detectives reported arresting Dominic Mitepli, 21, and Edward Sypulski, 21, both of Vandergrift.

2 FACE HEARING IN MAIL THEFT

Roy Black, of Cokeville, Pa., and Dempsey Yehnert, of Altoona, accused of breaking into the postoffice of Cokeville March 28 and stealing $3.36 in postal funds, were arrested by Deputy United States Marshal D. A. Goldman. Leonard Black, brother of Roy Black, a co-defendant, is in jail at Blairsville, Pa. They will be arraigned before the United States commissioner.

The postoffice is located in a general store, from which $100 worth of merchandise was said to have been stolen.

Street Slaying Laid To Gang Warfare

PUEBLO, Col., April 4.—(AP)—Gang warfare was blamed by authorities for the slaying here of a man identified by police as Carlo Maurello.

Maurello was killed with buckshot while sitting in an automobile on a downtown street. The shots were fired by men in a passing car. Police linked his assassination with the recent kidnaping of Ignacio Vacarro, nephew of Pete Carlino, reputed bootleg king of Southern Colorado.

Pittsburgh Officer Given Promotion

WASHINGTON, April 4.—(AP)—Promotion of Clyde C. Miller, of 186 Lemoyne avenue, Pittsburgh, to a lieutenant colonel in the Officers Reserve Corps was announced by the War Department.

FOCH DESCRIBES BRITISH FACING HOPELESS ODDS

French Rush Troops To Close Gap Made By Foe's Onslaught

Despite Shell Shortage and Torn Ranks, Poilus Defend Perilous Positions by Their Constant Attacks Against German Troops.

Marshal Foch described in yesterday's instalment the program evolved by the Allies for defense in Flanders and the fighting in the Yser region which had been flooded to impede the German advance late in October, 1914. Today's instalment tells of the critical situation that confronted the British before Ypres.

By MARSHAL FERDINAND FOCH

CHAPTER VII.

The great battle of Ypres, not without reason, has been called the Flanders melee. The diversity of the races, intermingling the various elements and units which took part in it, their arrival piecemeal on the scene, all precluded up to the very last day any systematic direction of the battle.

On their side, the Germans first sent against us intact bodies of troops, perfectly organized into new army corps and equipped with a formidable artillery. When, however, their initial efforts had been shattered, they drew on all their armies for divisions with which to feed the battle.

The nature of the ground was also the source of great confusion. Ypres is the center of a rich, well-cultivated region, covered with comfortable houses, many surrounded by parks. From a military point of view, the terrain is enclosed and broken, consisting in its poorer parts of forests, while the low flat plain is cut up by fields, bordered with high hedges which complete the obstruction of the view.

To obtain an idea of the nature of the battlefield, I climbed the towers which surmount the Cloth Hall of Ypres. In front of me stretched a sea of green, with little white islands marking the location of the rich villages, with their fine churches and graceful steeples.

Marshal Foch

To see open country in any direction was impossible. Three undulations slightly diminish the flatness of the plain; the first, northwest of Ypres, is from 12 to 25 feet high and about 2½ miles long; the second, from 30 to 40 feet high, lies about six miles east of Ypres and runs from Passchendaele to Zandvorde, a length of some 7½ miles; the third and most accentuated stretches to the south for some three miles between Wyschaete and Messines.

The Yperle Canal, which starts from the Yser and is continued by the one from Ypres to Comines, receives through a system of drainage canals (those of Beckes and Watergands) the surface waters of the region and makes communications, especially from west to east, very difficult.

Objective
British Could Not Reach It Under Attack

As a protection from the water, the roads are paved and elevated; they are few in number and for the most part converge on Ypres.

This combination of circumstances resulted in offering a battlefield broken up into compartments with difficult communications and where any view is impossible. This necessarily entailed a parceling out of the action and slowed it down from the very start.

In order to comprehend the sequence of events, it is necessary to go back to what happened just after October 21.

On that date we assumed the offensive. The British 1st Corps (Lieut. Gen. Sir Douglas Haig) supported on its left by our 2nd Cavalry Corps, advanced on Roulers. The final objective assigned it by Marshal French was Bruges. The British 4th Corps advanced on Menin, while on its right the British 3rd Corps (Lieut. Gen. Pulteney) and the British Cavalry Corps were facing strong German forces from the Lys to the Ypres Canal.

The British 1st Corps reached the line Langemark-Zonnebeke, but could get no farther in the face of the German 26th Reserve Corps. The other British corps were heavily attacked by troops among which were identified four cavalry corps as well as the 27th Reserve Corps.

In this way the attention of the British commander was drawn toward the Ys, and he requested that his 1st Corps might be relieved as soon as possible by French troops so that he might move it from the direction of Roulers to a position astride the Menin road. In compliance with this request I at once detailed the French 4th Corps (Gen. Dubois) to take over as it came up from the British 1st Corps.

The relief of the British troops under these conditions presented serious difficulties, the least of which was a slowing down of the action already begun. However, it resulted in this advantage, that in a short time each Allied army had its own separate zone of action; the British from La Bassee Canal to the Ypres road at Menin; the French from this road to Dixmude; the Belgian from Dixmude to the sea.

It was impossible for us to resume the offensive until the 25th. We were fighting along an immense half-circle 30 miles in extent and which jutted out to the east into a salient 12 miles deep. The forces we had at our disposal unfortunately were too small. All the British troops had arrived and the French reinforcements were slowly coming up. Consequently, the flanks were protected only by troops (mainly cavalry) spread out over considerable distances.

Unceasing
German Attack Continued With Great Violence

The British 1st Corps did not succeed in breaking the German resistance in front of Becelaere; the French 9th Corps, engaged against a reinforced and active adversary, advanced only with the greatest difficulty, making small headway towards Passchendaele.

Beginning with October 28 the fighting became more and more desperate along the whole front. At several points the enemy had already erected barbed-wire defenses. During the three following days the battle reached its culminating point of violence. Imbued with the same offensive spirit, the two adversaries, each night and day, hurled themselves unceasingly against one another in a succession of attacks and counter-attacks that produced no appreciable result.

The German heavy artillery increased in numbers every day, and, through lack of proper guns, we were unable to counter-batter it effectively. On the other hand, the Germans were constantly held in check by the well-directed barrage fire of our 75's, though here we had to husband our ammunition, as we had very little.

To sum up, after five days of continuous attacks, the Allied troops found their efforts nullified by an equal determination on the part of the enemy; the shock had been brutal but barren; the opposing forces were equally balanced. A break-through on our part could be effected only by bringing into play new and more powerful means of action.

The inundations along the Yser, which had stopped the fighting below Dixmude, now enabled us to throw the French 32nd Corps (Gen. Humbert) into the battle of Ypres, while the French 16th Corps (Gen. Taverna), which was detraining, would soon arrive. But these reinforcements, however precious, were small in comparison with those which the Germans were concentrating on the Lys.

These began to make themselves felt by the 30th on the British front, while those brought from the lower Yser, when the battle ended there, were directed against the French. This ever-increasing effort of the enemy had to be met with all our energy if we were to block his march on Ypres, Dunkirk and Calais.

Offensive
'We Defended Ourselves By Attacking Enemy'

Our offensive being now definitely arrested, we had to confine ourselves to contesting the positions we had won. In the low ground around Ypres, however, the nearness of the water to the surface prevented trenches from being dug; moreover, ever since the retreat from Charleroi a great number of our troops were without entrenching tools. The organization of a continuous line of defense, therefore, was out of the question, all the more so as its length alone would require more men than we had available.

Finally a merely passive resistance on our part would indicate to the enemy that we were abandoning the fight, and would be an acknowledgment of weakness, which could only stimulate him to redouble his blows. Our only recourse, therefore, was to maintain an offensive attitude and to defend ourselves by attacking.

Profiting by the enclosed nature of the country, we could contest with repeated counter-attacks all the enemy's gains, and by the rapid movement of reserves from the center to the circumference of our semi-circular position, we could parry his efforts and minimize his advantages.

Nevertheless, we could not contemplate the future with anything but grave anxiety, for the poverty of our means and the duration of the battle might end by wearing out our troops' power of resistance and triumph over all their energy.

It was amidst this threatening outlook that the British made an examination into the possibility of organizing Boulogne for receiving a garrison of 100,000 men, in spite of the danger to French susceptibilities involved in such a solid installation.

The day of October 30 passed without serious incident for our 9th and 32nd Corps and our 2nd Cavalry Corps holding the northern face of the Ypres salient. On the southern face, however, the Germans launched a powerful attack on the right of the British 1st Corps and on the left of the British Cavalry Corps, executed by their 15th Corps, 48th Reserve and 26th Infantry Division, debouching from the Lys between Menin and Warneton.

Exhausted
British Cavalry Was Without Infantry Support

Following an exceptionally heavy bombardment, the British cavalry (2nd and 3rd Divisions), greatly exhausted and without any infantry support, was thrown back from Zanworde and Hollebeke on Klein-Zillebeke and Saint-Eloi, two miles from Ypres. At the same time, the British 1st Cavalry Division lost a portion of Messines.

The result was that the enemy's access to Ypres from the southeast was greatly facilitated, while at the same time this important center of communications between the Allied Armies was brought within range of the German guns. Fortunately the general commanding the French 9th Corps appreciated the seriousness of the situation thus created and came at once to the aid of his neighbor. All his available forces, three infantry battalions, were directed upon Zillebeke, where they arrived in time to give their support that night to the British front.

Towards the end of the afternoon a first report of these events was brought to my headquarters at Cassel by Capt. Bertier de Sauvigny, liaison officer attached to Sir John French; but it was impossible for me to properly estimate its significance.

Gap Opened
British Line Broke Before German Attack

Generally speaking, during a modern battle, where nothing is clearly seen, especially in an enclosed country, the results obtained are learned only through reports which show what localities are held by the troops at the end of the day. But, when the line has been pierced or even merely thrown back, these reports come in slowly and are not clear and definite, since the liaison between organizations had been weakened.

In fact, it is precisely when the situation is gravest that a commander gets the least information from the front and runs the greatest risk of having no time in which to make dispositions to repair the harm.

I was waiting the report of one of my staff officers, Capt. Requin, whom I had sent up in the morning to get information on the spot. About 10 p. m. he informed me that there was certainly a gap in the British cavalry front which they could not fill from want of men. If this gap was not rapidly closed the road to Ypres would be open.

I at once telephoned to British general headquarters at Saint Omer to ask if they had any fuller information regarding the situation at the end of the day, especially in the direction of Hollebeke and Saint-Eloi. Upon receiving the reply that nothing more definite was known, I telephoned that I was leaving at once for Saint Omer to see Sir John French.

It was not far from midnight. If we waited any longer we ran the risk of seeing the enemy pushing through the gap the following morning, or at all events establishing himself firmly a short distance from Ypres. This would prevent any movement through the town and bring about a retreat under the fire of enemy's guns of all our troops fighting east of the town, that is to say, of the greatest portion of the army. That would amount to almost a complete disaster.

Warned
Marshal French Aroused During Night by Foch

Arriving at Saint-Omer at 12:30 a. m., I saw my friend, Gen. Wilson, and had Sir John French awakened.

We studied the situation together. The British had no forces available for stopping the gap. So far as I was concerned, I would have, on the morning of October 31, eight battalions of the 16th Corps detrained at Alverdinghe, of which some were already there.

I suggested to the field marshal that I should send them without delay to close the breach in the British line, but there was not a moment to lose if the move was to be carried out before daylight.

The field marshal expressed his gratitude in the warmest terms. On my return to Cassel at 2 a. m. I ordered the battalions of the 32nd Division, which were being assembled at Alverdinghe, to be dispatched by motor transport to Saint-Eloi as soon as they arrived. Here they would attack in liaison with the British troops. In this way we repaired the effects of a surprise which might have had most serious results.

We were not, however, at the end of our troubles. At dawn on October 31, the fighting was renewed along the whole front with the same violence as the day before. Nothing of special importance happened on the northern face of the Ypres salient, held by the French Corps, but a serious situation arose on the south face held by the British army. The enemy had been reinforced here by a new corps, the 2nd Bavarian, and, stimulated by his success of the previous day, he multiplied his attacks from Gheluwelt to Messines.

The British 1st Division, in spite of a gallant resistance, was unable to hold Gheluwelt, which fell into the hands of the Germans. The British line was broken, and during the middle of the afternoon flowed back to the woods between Vedhoek and Hooge.

The Chateau d'Hooge was heavily bombarded and the commanders of the British 1st and 2nd Divisions, together with several officers of their staff, were killed or wounded. The situation was critical. British headquarters considered the situation to be of such gravity that it contemplated retreat of the whole of the British 1st Corps.

Such a decision would be the acknowledgment and the beginning of a defeat which might easily turn into a disaster, on account of the fact that the troops on the northern face of the salient would be in great part cut off from their communications. A providential piece of luck enabled us to avoid this disaster.

ROBINS FEAR LOSS OF EX-BUCCANEER

GLENN WRIGHT, former Pirate shortstop, again is the big question mark in connection with the pennant chances of the Brooklyn Robins. The ex-Buccaneer has been the one man to make or break the Flatbush club ever since he was traded to that outfit by Pittsburgh for Jess Petty and Harry Riconda following the season of 1928. In 1929, with his throwing arm out of commission, Wright was a total loss, with the result that the Robins were unable to break even and finished in sixth place. Last year he pulled a sensational comeback and had as much to do with making Brooklyn a flag contender as any other individual player.

Glenn Wright

Now he is again a source of worry in the Robin camp. An old injury in his right ankle has kept him out of many exhibition games, and may handicap him for the whole season. A special leather brace has been constructed for the injured part, but to what extent it will remedy the trouble is still undetermined, and the Brooklyn management admits grave concern as to whether Glenn is going to be able to hold up for the year.

THE NATURE OF Wright's ailment, which has troubled him at intervals for years, has puzzled doctors and trainers. X-ray pictures have failed to show anything wrong, but the ankle frequently goes back on him and after the least exertion he may pull up with a limp.

Wright is hopeful that the brace will enable him to stay in the game regularly, but if it fails the Brooklyn club will be hard hit. With Glenn on the job steadily the Robins will have a good chance for the flag, but without him they could hardly hope to come through.

SPEAKING OF WRIGHT, the modesty that was one of his outstanding characteristics while he was wearing a Pittsburgh uniform, came into evidence again the other day when he was informed that the old debate was again raging between Brooklyn and New York as to the relative shortstopping merits of Travis Jackson and himself.

"Travis, I reckon, is the better fielder, hits better, and has the stronger throwing arm," was the way Wright sought to decide the argument. "Jackson is the best shortstop in the National League."

DONIE BUSH appears to have made a good move in buying Lu Blue, holdout first baseman of the St. Louis Americans, to fill the hole at the gateway of the White Sox infield. That position has been Bush's main problem since Ray Radcliffe failed to make good and the only other courses open to him were to play Outfielder Johnny Watwood at the position or trade Willie Kamm to Cleveland for Lew Fonseca. In the deal he has made with the Browns he gets one of the best fielding first sackers in the business and also retains Kamm. Blue's hitting may improve in new surroundings. He has not been getting along smoothly with the Brown management.

Jimmy Wilson

JIMMY WILSON, star catcher of the Cardinals, adds his testimony to that of several other National League players that the best hitter in the old circuit in a pinch is Riggs Stephenson, of the Cubs.

"When that fellow is at bat and there is something important at stake, I'm going to tell our pitcher to walk him," Wilson adds. "He is the master hitter of the age in the pinches. The other fellows will fail now and then, but you can't stop Stephenson. All the pitchers agree on that."

WILSON ALSO GIVES it as his opinion, and the Cardinal pitchers concur, that Lefty O'Doul is a better hitter than Babe Herman, the big sock man of the Robins. They point out that O'Doul fanned only 21 times in 528 legal trips to the plate last year, whereas Herman struck out 56 times.

O'Doul is held to be a studious batter, while Herman is of the kind that hits the ball a mile or misses it altogether. Both are plenty tough, it is admitted, but the Card flingers predict O'Doul will be a harder man to pitch to this year than Babe.

THE VETERAN BOXING announcer, Joe Humphreys, recalls that it was 28 years ago this week that Young Corbett knocked out Terry McGovern in the eleventh round at San Francisco. It was Terry's second knockout at Corbett's hands. Not only both battlers, but all of the other men who were connected with the staging of that fight, excepting Humphreys and Jim Coffroth, who promoted it, have passed on. Eddie Graney refereed, George Harding was timekeeper, and Billy Jordan did the announcing, though Jordan turned over to Humphreys a share of the latter assignment.

DAZZY VANCE wants you to know that when he signed a Brooklyn contract for a paltry $23,000 he did it at a great personal sacrifice and threw away his own interests for the sake of the Brooklyn club. Noble of him, was it not? Of course, Dazzy never took into consideration the fact that if the Robins win the pennant he will get a $5,000 or $6,000 extra in world series money, or that early in the season he is to receive $2,500 for 10 weekly radio talks of 10 minutes each, which he would not have received if he had not signed.

Vance modestly admits that if he had not finally consented to rejoin the Robins their pennant chance would have been wrecked. "I sacrificed my own interests for those of the Brooklyn club," he said, "and that's more than Mr. York would do. He was willing to wreck our pennant chances for the $2,000 that stood between us, but I wasn't, and that dough means more to me that it does to the club."

A M'KEESPORT READER wants to know who was the first coach to use the forward pass and when. A large number of coaches, particularly in the East, took it up at the same time and started to experiment with it when it was first made legal by the rules in 1906.

Jack Sharkey

Yale got especially good results with it that season, with Veeder throwing the passes. Glenn Warner, coaching the Carlisle Indians, also was a pioneer in developing it. He equipped the players eligible to receive passes with headgear of a color different from the rest to guide the passer in throwing the ball. The first famous passing combinations of Dorais to Rockne, Notre Dame, and Pritchard to Merrillat, Army, were not developed until several years later.

THE ANNOUNCEMENT THAT Jack Sharkey will appear in a bout at Ebbets Field in Brooklyn on June 3 against Tommy Loughran, Mickey Walker or Victorio Campolo (why Campolo should be given the slightest consideration as an opponent is a mystery) improves what was previously a drab outlook for outdoor boxing in New York this year. Until now the best gate in sight for the summer was that promised at a possible welterweight championship match with Jimmy McLarnin as the challenger, provided he beats Billy Petrolle in their return bout on May 8, and there was no prospect of total outdoor receipts equaling those of last year in New York, when four ball-park shows grossed $1,127,542, the Sharkey-Schmeling affair topping the list with an intake of $711,668.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 4. — The Pirates heard another stiff lecture from Manager Ens today before they dressed for the day's clash with the Missions. The calldown was a continuation of a censure delivered by the pilot after the Buccos had succumbed to the Seals yesterday afternoon.

Ens contends some of his stars are not putting forth their best efforts and, even though these are exhibition contests, Jewel wants 100 per cent in effort, as it were. It is true Capt. Pie Traynor's high throw in the seventh inning was a big factor in the 6-to-2 setback handed the Buccos, but Pie was hustling when he made his wild heave and Ens did not berate him in any way. Others, however, felt the lash on the charge they were not playing out the string.

Remy Kremer will attempt to do the nine-inning stretch this afternoon. Frenchy appears to be close to top form, his performance against the Cubs a few days ago being quite impressive.

Heinie Meine traveled the full distance yesterday, but the St. Louis Dutchman was given some loose support in the seventh as the Seals swam off with the decision. Traynor's high throw to Suhr with runners on third and second let both tallies go over the plate. A moment before Pie's

CHICAGO.—(AP.) — George Trafton, who weighs down the center of the Chicago Bears' football line with his 230 pounds and pummeled the Great Arthur Shires in his prize ring debut, has asked the courts to divorce him from his 110-pound wife because she is cruel to him. He charges she beat him with a ginger ale bottle, kicked him and tossed a chair and a carving knife at him. They were married June 14, 1929, at Winona, Minn., and separated last December.

EXPLANATIONS OF RIPLEY'S CARTOONS OF YESTERDAY: THE CARGO OF NEW ZEALAND FOG—On February 5, 1931, the Matson liner Golden Coast arrived at Portland, Ore., from the South Seas with a cargo of New Zealand fog. This "fog" was not atmospheric vapor, but a special kind of grass seed. SIX FLAGS HAVE FLOWN OVER THE ALAMO—The history of the present Alamo dates back to only 1718, at which time the Franciscans erected it to serve as a chapel of the Mission San Antonio de Valero. However, it stands on soil over which the French flag flew as early as 1685. From 1690 to 1821, the Spanish held Texas, and it was under Mexican rule from 1821 until 1836. At that time Texas won her independence and became a republic. In 1845 she was admitted to statehood and the American flag took its place over the state until the secession in 1861, when the flag of the Confederate States replaced it. Since 1865 the Stars and Stripes have flown over the Alamo continuously.

N' CASTLE PIN STARS WIN

BUFFALO, April 4.—Huntington and New Castle pinsters flailed their way into the American Bowling Congress tournament money yesterday, but Erie pinjammers were out in the cold. J. Biagi and B. Gibson, of Huntington, came through with a good 1176 to cash and so did E. Bourner and B. Workman, who shot 1134. The best Huntington singles was the 608 of C. Ridgley. V. Clutter will cash with his 584.

New Castle offered two singles winners in M. Solomon and C. Rafferty, they getting 583 and 587, respectively.

Neither of Erie's five-men teams showed other than mediocre scoring, the Plumbers getting games of 730, 803 and 848 for a 2381 total, and the Builders shooting 739, 851 and 813 for a 2403.

Scoring games of 915, 1,061 and 986, Palace Recreations, of Detroit, rolled into first place in the five-men event with a total of 2,962. Yesterday's scores:

Rockne Not Wholly Superstitious Fatal Trip West Proves

THIRD INSTALLMENT

By WARREN BROWN
(Copyright, 1931, Chicago Herald and Examiner.)

CHICAGO, April 4.—Some mention has been made, from time to time, of Knute Rockne's superstitions.

His players who have invaded the Plains at West Point recall that they were always required to use the waiters' entrance.

It is a known fact that Rockne and his teams, while in Chicago, invariably stopped at the Auditorium Hotel, on the lake front. It is a matter of record that no Notre Dame team in the Rockne era ever lost a game in Chicago.

That is one phase of the Rockne superstitions. That he was not wholly superstitious, I am prepared to prove. If he had been, it is improbable that he would have departed on the fatal journey to the Pacific Coast, much as he liked that great section, and its residents.

Knute Rockne

For Rockne recognized the fact, coincidental or not, that each successive visit was accompanied by trouble.

The evening before he left the office of the Herald and Examiner, to catch the train for Kansas City, and begin the air journey that ended in tragedy, Rockne himself brought up this subject:

"Well," he said, "I wonder what will happen, this time?"

MANY UNHAPPY MOMENTS

As far back as the appearance of the Four Horsemen at Pasadena, in the New Year's game of 1925, events transpired that left Rockne many unhappy moments.

The game with Stanford was a thrilling spectacle, and although it was won by Notre Dame, 27 to 10, the grueling contest took its toll. Within a day after it, Jimmy Crowley, one of the Horsemen, exhausted from the play, collapsed, and, for a time his life hung in the balance.

This, in itself, was disaster enough, but when one of the frequent newspaper controversies broke out, over something that had been said—or hadn't been said, as it later developed—over the Stanford style of play, there was trouble enough for a team of Rocknes.

On a subsequent trip to Los Angeles, this time with the University of Southern California as his objective, Rockne stopped over with the team at Tucson.

He was host, as he has always been, to sporting writers, and permitted them the freedom of the practice field.

Some of them, considering it their line of duty, brought back and published details of offense

By JESS CARVER

For the right to wear the crown of state scholastic basketball champion for 1931, Scott High, of North Braddock, and Lower Merion, hailing from the more or less general vicinity of Ardmore, Pa., near Philadelphia, clash in the Stadium tonight.

The contest is the finale of the long and very much dragged out P. I. A. A. title campaign. It should have been all washed up and over with two weeks ago, but they run this P. I. A. A. affair in a very funny way, so here it is, April, and we're still dealing with school basketballers.

FIRST TIME IN FINALE

Scott is competing for the state title for the first time tonight, and has back of it the W. P. I. A. L. gonfalon and triumphs in three interdistrict games. Lower Merion struggled through to the finale last year, losing out to Sharon High in the deciding tussle in Penn's Palestra in Philadelphia.

Scott has compiled an enviable record this year. The team has won 24 out of 29 games, whipped three of the teams that managed to defeat it, and likely would have licked the other two had return matches been booked.

Lower Merion lost the first game of the season to Episcopal Academy, of Philadelphia, and since then, in a right impressive manner, has won 22 games in a row and out of the 23 played.

Two members of the near-champion entourage that bowed to Sharon last year are back in harness and will be in action tonight. Coach Bill Anderson, who, by the way, hails as a native son, from North Braddock, has constructed his team around Pennypacker and Turner, of the '30 team. He has filled in with capable performers in Eaton, Wynn, a little chap, and Bradford. The team is big, rangy, accurate and fast passers and strong defensively.

TEAM OF STARS

Scott has a whirlwind combination in its little forward guard duo, Ralph Ferguson and Johnny Krutullis. The center, Vic Bache, is big enough and good enough to hold his own with the best of 'em. Ken Kuno, who is filling in at forward, in the stead of the ineligible Capt. Buck Tomko, goes along very well, thank you, at that position. Phillips is playing Kuno's guard job. He turned in a noteworthy performance against Hollidaysburg in the semi-final game last week.

A choo-choo load of Lower Merion rooters will arrive in town today, accompanied by the school's band. These gentry will seek to encourage the Easterners in their second quest for the state laurel. The remainder of the 4,000 or so who will be out there yelping will be from North Braddock.

So beware!

The committee will make its official report on football at the annual league meeting to be held in May.

BASEBALL DROPPED

CLARKSBURG, W. Va., April 4.—T. Edward Davis, athletic director at Salem College, has announced that baseball will not be included in its athletic program this year, despite the fact that it was formerly a major sport there. Football activities and interest, he said, have overshadowed it.

Says Nick Altrock

(Baseball's Comedian)

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., April 4.—That female pitcher up in Chattanooga sure got a nice start fanning Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig. All she needed to make it a perfect debut was to catch the Prince of Wales off first base.

Nick Altrock

Babe and Lou almost sprained a kidney swinging at the ball, but they were cross-eyed with chivalry. Of course, if knighthood is in flower in that Southern League, that girlie may get by in the regular season. But if the batters ever forget they are swinging in the presence of a lady, she better bring her kimono down to the clubhouse, because she's going to have a lot of shower baths.

SHARKEY TO FIGHT WALKER OR CARNERA

MILK FUND MAY STAGE GO IN JULY

NEW YORK, April 4.—(AP.)—William F. Carey, president of the Madison Square Corporation, has announced that final disposition of the proposed heavyweight match between Max Schmeling and Young Stribling would be made by Sheldon Clark, his Chicago associate, on April 15.

At that time, Carey said, Sheldon will name a definite site for the battle. It was understood Cleveland stood the best chance of landing the bout, since Chicago virtually had been eliminated as a contender.

Although no formal announcement had been made, it is understood that the Hearst Milk Fund, which decided early in the week to have nothing more to do with the Schmeling-Stribling affair, has aligned itself with Jimmy Johnston, Madison Square's new promotorial rival.

Working together, the Milk Fund committee and Johnston hope to promote a bout between Jack Sharkey and either Mickey Walker or Primo Carnera in July. Johnston has signed Sharkey to fight for him three times this summer at Ebbets Field.

LONDOS MAY MEET GEORGE

NEW YORK, April 4.—Jim Londos and Don George, rival claimants to the world heavyweight wrestling championship, will meet for benefit of the New York Milk Fund if George is willing to risk his claim.

PIRATES MEET MISSIONS

foozle, Catcher Wilson made a double on a drive over Comorosky's head, which Ens thinks should have been caught. There was a lethargic strain to the play of the Pittsburghers during most of the game and Ens will eradicate this at any cost.

Paul Waner was able to play a part of the contest. It is likely Paul could have remained at his post through the whole game, but with such a good utility man as Jensen sitting around, the manager could not see the wisdom of taking any chances.

Elmer Jacobs, a member of the Pirate pitching staff almost 15 years ago, opposed the Freebooters through six rounds of the game and Elmer was in his usual rare form. The veteran certainly knows how to pitch to the Pirates, who had to have a single from Meine with two out in the fifth to score the only run charged against Jacobs. Traynor scored the last Pittsburgh tally in the ninth on his single, and hits by Suhr and Hemsley.

Jimmy Caveney started a five-run drive for the Seals in the seventh. The home team injected five hits into this round, the bad play of the big leaguers aiding the enemy cause. The Seals picked up another run in the eighth when they connected for three bingles.

and defense that were supposed to have been held secret.

Rockne never forgot that incident. He forgave it, years later, and even used it as the basis of some of his humorous stories, in Los Angeles, no later than the recent winter.

WARY OF NEWSPAPERMEN

But at the time, and for a long while thereafter, he was wary of newspapermen who looked too much like investigators, or "scouts."

On another trip, Little Jack, one of Rockne's sons, was left at home in South Bend, and even as the game with Southern California was being played, the youngster was engaged in a fight for his life, from complications that had set in after the lodging of a peanut shell in his throat.

Little Jack, the last of the Rocknes, put up a fight that was worthy of his sire, and won through to recovery.

Nevertheless, the anxious moments were never forgotten.

It was on the way to Los Angeles last December, that Rockne first called my attention to this series of ill-fated happenings.

He wondered then, what was going to happen, on that trip.

At the moment when he became convinced that his regular fullback, Larry Mullins, would be unable to play, it seemed that enough had happened to tie that trip up with the others, and their misfortunes.

SETTLES CONTROVERSY

But when Rockne reached Los Angeles, he was cast into the midst of a Pacific Coast Conference controversy, raging around one of his old boys, Jimmy Phelan, now coach of Washington, and Howard Jones, coach of Southern California.

There had been charges and counter-charges that Washington's team had roughhoused Southern California in a game just before the arrival of Notre Dame. Jones, in radio broadcasts, was quite indignant about it all.

The story was told and retold, and, as stories will, grew out of all proportions in the telling.

When Rockne reached Los Angeles, the substance of the story that was first told him was no less than sensational.

Without attempting to weigh its merits, though most of it, I am sure, was ridiculous—it seems proper to tell it here, so that its effect upon Rockne can best be judged.

He was told, and I was in the audience, that Jones charged Phelan with coaching his team in rough tactics, with a view towards weakening Southern California for the Notre Dame game. Phelan being, of course, a Notre Dame man; it was told that Jones had recalled a game with St. Mary's, coached by Ed (Slip) Madigan, another Notre Dame man, that had also interfered with the health and happiness of the Trojans, and he was told, finally, that Jones was intimating that this procedure was a part of the Notre Dame system, and that agitation should be started to put Phelan and Madigan in their places.

For the first and last time in his life, I saw Rockne in a rage.

He sent for Phelan, and got his version. He calmed somewhat, then. He was scheduled to speak at a Southern California dinner that night, and he left his hotel determined to have a showdown with Jones, going so far as to say that if there was an element of truth in the reports of what Jones had said, relations between Notre Dame and Southern California were at an end.

Certainly there was no heated argument between them, for Phelan and I were close enough to have been attracted by any undue vocal gymnastics.

TEMPEST IN TEAPOT

That the whole affair was a tempest in a teapot, seems obvious, for when the Coast Conference met a day or two later, Jones and Phelan not only shook hands, but games between Southern California and Washington, and even Southern California and St. Mary's were arranged, without any great debate.

Whatever the merits of the coast's controversy, the fact remains that it supplied, on the very first day of his arrival in Los Angeles, the answer to Rockne's question:

"I wonder what's going to happen this trip?"

Rockne went back to the coast, in February of this year. I was there at the time, and knowing that he was coming, began to wonder what the fates might spin this time.

Newspapermen, or many of them, had difficulty in finding Rockne the day of his arrival, though he had been at various places throughout the day.

And then broke loose that story concerning a possible suit against him for an accounting of money advanced for the importing of an all-star Notre Dame team to Los Angeles for a charity football game, a few weeks previous.

Rockne was disturbed by that story, though it collapsed in short order.

HAD ENOUGH OF IT

He had reached a point, he told me then, in which he had about decided he had enough of that part of the country, much as he liked it.

"If I could come out here once, just once," he said, "and not have something happen, I'd like to reconsider. But maybe I'd better see about arranging games with Bill Ingram, at California, or with Pop Warner, at Stanford, and try my luck up there."

As far as I know, Rockne had reached a tentative agreement with Ingram for a home-and-home series with California, beginning in the fall of 1932.

When we were talking, just before his departure on his last journey, Rockne discussed that situation, at length.

"There are some matters that have to be arranged," he said, "but I'm meeting Bill (Ingram) in Los Angeles, and we'll probably straighten it all out."

Rockne twirled the inevitable cigar between thumb and forefinger, in silence for a moment.

"Of course," he concluded, "we'll talk about that, if I'm not being sued, or something else. I wonder what it will be, this time?"

Superstition? No.

Premonition?

I wonder.

MISS VAN WIE, MISS ORCUTT IN FINAL

PINEHURST, N. C., April 4.—(AP.)—Virginia Van Wie, of Chicago, for two years runner-up in the national women's championship, will make her fifth attempt to win the North and South women's golf tournament today with the long-driving Maureen Orcutt, of Englewood, N. J., as her opponent.

These two blasted their way through semi-final matches to gain entrance to the championship round. Miss Van Wie broke down a spirited bid from young Jane Brooks, Nyack, N. Y., to win on the back nine, 3 and 2, while Miss Orcutt also closed her match on the sixteenth green, defeating Mrs. O. S. Hill, of Kansas City, 4 and 2.

NIED CUP TILT OFF

The second semi-final of the Nied Cup, played for this afternoon at the Westinghouse High School field, with Pittsburgh Celtics and the Pierpoints providing the entertainment, has been postponed because of the soggy condition of the field.

AMATEUR TEST AWARDED TO FIELD CLUB

By VERN SWARTSFAGER

The star amateurs of the district will be delighted to learn that the qualifying round for the national amateur championship—the first ever to be held here—will be played some time in July over the testy links of the Pittsburgh Field Club, where the National open qualifying was played last year. A meeting of local golf officials next week is to be held to definitely decide the date.

Information that Oakmont is not likely to be awarded either the National amateur or National open next year is well founded, because the North course at the Los Angeles club at least fully expects to stage the open in conjunction with the Olympics next year.

According to Bob Harlow, in the Golf Tournament News, official P. G. A. tournament publication, at a recent luncheon in Los Angeles, Jack Warner casually remarked that he expected the National open of next year to be awarded to Los Angeles.

∴ Rookie Tales ∴

NO. 14—GEORGE GRANT

SAN FRANCISCO, April 4.—Aside from the dozen or so new rookies who came into the Pirate fold this spring were several strangers who were at least recruits, although they scarcely could be called raw rooks. An interesting member of this smaller group is Pitcher George A. Grant, of Alabama.

George Grant

George saw almost three years of service with the Cleveland Indians and his minor league career carried him into various circuits. At the present time he is making a strong effort to land a berth in the Buccaneer sharpshooting division and, if his skill is commensurate with his smartness, he is a dangerous contender.

"Grant isn't as popular for a moniker in Alabama as Lee would be," said George, who is one of the most humorous fellows on the club. "But I had plenty of relatives on both sides in that disagreement," he continued. "There were Grants on the Grant side and on the Lee side, too."

UP WITH BROWNS

George, it seems, made the jump from obscurity to the majors with too much speed. He was twirling for "dear old Rutgers" at Alabama Poly, where Coach Mike Donohue prevailed. And Mike knew his stuff so well that George was quick to grasp the fundamentals of the game.

That was almost 10 years ago. George came along so smoothly that a major league offer was pushed under his nose in the form of a St. Louis contract. But when the kid reached the big show he found it was no bed of roses and he was started on the long drill through the bush circuits.

"I cannot see where there is much difference between the two major leagues," mused George. "The whole thing is an even proposition, with good hitters, pitchers and fielders in both circuits. It's a little tough on a pitcher or catcher to move from one big show to the other. You see, one of the big ideas is knowing how to pitch to the various batters, and it takes much to acquire this knowledge."

AN ALABAMA CRACKER

George is one of the best built athletes in the Pittsburgh squad. His Alabama accent is pronounced and when he begins to talk the other fellows generally listen, for he usually is good for a wise crack that gets a big laugh.

Grant knows how to strum a banjo, so that Adam Comorasky and the Waner boys have had their band augmented. The four are especially good on a train which moves along about 60 miles an hour. The roar of the wheels is just right for drowning out the discords.—CHARLES S. DOYLE.

ALL INVADERS AT GARDEN

By HARRY KECK,
Sports Editor.

There isn't a local boxer in the whole carload of talent that will be on display in the weekly fistic show in the Motor Square Garden ring Monday night.

Look 'em over, here's the bill:

First bout—Freddie Haverlack, of New York (stablemate of Rosenbloom), vs. Joey Boler, of Erie, 6 rounds.

Rosenbloom, one of the playboys of the ring, is due to arrive in town tomorrow morning and may work out lightly in the Garden gymnasium in the afternoon. Jones already is on the scene, having arrived yesterday.

Between Rounds

Jackie Rodgers' opponent in the six-round preliminary to the Tommy Freeman-Young Jack Thompson welterweight title bout in Cleveland, April 14, will be Chico Cisneros.

Larry Madge meets Ted Yarosz, Billy Brent boxes Jimmy Taylor and Frankie Chatterton engages Benny McArthur in eight-round bouts at Oil City next Wednesday night. The show planned for Franklin, Pa., on Monday, has been called off.

The new local wrestling monopoly chartered by a flock of out-of-town individuals as the Pittsburgh Wrestling Club, and the only organization to be granted a license to operate here by the State Athletic Commission, although local men have sought permission, has closed an agreement with Motor Square Garden whereby it will put on its first card of exhibitions there one week from next Wednesday night.

Jack McVey, of New York, and K. O. Kelly, of Akron, have been matched to box 20 rounds to a referee's decision for the world Negro middleweight championship at Barberton, O., April 13.

Vanities Advance In Ohio Tourney

EAST LIVERPOOL, O., April 4.—The Goldenson Vanities, of Pittsburgh, advanced to the third round of the girls' basketball tournament in progress here, by trimming Bellaire Ex-Hi, 33 to 16, last night. In other second round games, Barberton Cokes beat California, 21 to 19, and Leavittsburg, which claims the world championship, tripped the Caldwell Co-Eds, 46 to 9.

SPORT VIGNETTES

J. F. Mullaney, of Martins Ferry, O., remembers when the late Knute Rockne, now the widely mourned late Notre Dame football coach, played for the Massillon (O.) Tigers pro team against his Martins Ferry Collegians at Dick Padden Park in Martins Ferry and had tape plastered over his face to hide his identity . . . Mullaney always admired Rockne because of his Fighting Irish teams, and Mullaney is no Norwegian, either . . . In answer to many inquiries regarding the last team picked by the All-America Board of Football, of which Rockne was chairman (that of last fall), here it is: Fesler, Ohio State, and Dalrymple, Tulane, ends; Sington, Alabama, and Hein, Washington State, tackles; Lineban, Yale, and Beckett, California, guards; Ticknor, Harvard, center; Carideo, Notre Dame, quarterback; Brill, Notre Dame, and Pinckert, Southern California, halfbacks, and Russell, Northwestern, fullback.

On March 31, 1930, Jack Gagnon, a fourth-rate heavyweight from Boston, scored one of the biggest fistic upsets of the time when he knocked out Tuffy Griffiths, up-and-coming heavyweight contender, in the sixth round of a bout in the Arena in Philadelphia . . . Last Monday night, in the same ring, and exactly one year later, lacking one day, Young Firpo, a youngster from New Jersey, hardly known outside the Philadelphia sector, was tossed in against Benny Bass, the junior-lightweight champion . . . Rated a setup, he survived a knockdown in the first round to carry the fight to Bass all of the way and win the decision, which Philadelphia papers say he merited, although news reports had it that the verdict was unpopular.

Among the men mentioned in the East as eligible for the vacant post of president of the American League is Christy Walsh, the man behind the great publicizing of Babe Ruth and the late Knute Rockne . . . Christy is a demon executive and a supersalesman, a diplomat of the first water and a man who would make a great contact man for baseball . . . The only hitch is that he probably makes more money conducting his sports syndicate than the American League would care to pay him if it wanted his services . . . Incidentally, Christy narrowly escaped making the fatal flight with Rockne, arranging to go by train to the Coast, where he was to meet the football coach . . . In a telegram to the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph, Walsh says he spent all of last Sunday with Rockne at South Bend, closing contracts with him for radio and moving picture appearances and commercial tieups, aside from his writing efforts, which would have netted Knute more than $100,000 this year . . . Notre Dame University officials approved the contracts on Monday and Walsh was to leave South Bend the following day by rail to join Rockne in Los Angeles, where the coach was to hop into the movie end of the program . . . News of the airplane disaster reached Walsh before he could leave South Bend, and he remained there to assist in the funeral arrangements for his long-time friend and business associate.

Paris Cangy, of New Castle, recently stopped Johnny Kusic, of Youngstown, with an "invisible punch." The end came when Kusic was unable to respond to the bell for the third session, losing by a technical knockout . . . Kusic and the ringside fans thought he had been fouled, and some claimed Cangy's knee had done the damage . . . However, a physical examination revealed the fact that no foul had been delivered . . . According to Cangy, a notorious hard hitter, the blow was a perfect solar plexus punch, scored at close quarters, with the quickness of the hand deceiving the eye and making the punch virtually "invisible."—HARRY KECK.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

LAST NIGHT'S RESULT

Les Canadiens 2—Chicago 1

By CARL W. SHATTO

The International Hockey League season here will be brought to a close tonight when the Yellow Jackets meet the Windsor Bulldogs in their sixth and final game in the circuit's annual championship series.

Because their best efforts in five previous playoff games earned them nothing better than reversals, the Schooley skaters some little time ago gave up the right to demand that the crown be sent to Pittsburgh, but they still have a vote to cast for or against Windsor, and, strange as it may seem, the weight of this vote is likely to determine the resting place of the diadem.

INDIANS PLAY BISONS

While Windsor is battling the Jackets here, the Cleveland Indians, defending champions and present pace-setters in the playoffs, will be hosts to the Buffalo Bisons in Cleveland. Should the Jackets down the Bulldogs while the Indians are winning on their home ice, the race will have been decided, and Cleveland will retain the title for another year. Should the locals cast their vote for the Bulldogs, however, by losing to Windsor again, then the Dominion team would need only to defeat Buffalo in their postponed game next Tuesday to guarantee its lifting the crown.

The 8-2 setback which the locals absorbed in Windsor on Thursday would indicate that the chances for a Pittsburgh victory tonight are extremely slender, but those who saw the last Windsor-Pittsburgh battle here can be excused for thinking otherwise. That game is easily recalled, because it marked Goalie Albie Cox's only "off night" of the season. Albie amazed all and sundry by permitting the Bulldogs to bounce home two shots started from the middle of the rink, and those two unearned goals enabled the badly outplayed Bulldogs to hold the Jackets to a deadlock in the three regulation periods.

Windsor-Pittsburgh battles ever have produced fast, furious action, and it is likely that the finale will be a thriller in keeping with the tumultousness of the season of which it marks the finish. The probable lineup:

| Pittsburgh. | | Windsor. |
|---|---|---|
| Cox | G | Smith |
| Smith | L. D. | Bellemer |
| Heise | R. D. | Arbour |
| McGuire | C. | Haynes |
| Proudlock | L. W. | Duguid |
| White | R. W. | Robinson |

Valuable Cactus

Certain types of cactus grown in Arizona, even after three years of drought, produce delicious fruit, used for centuries by the Indians for syrups and dried fruit.

TELL IT TO SALLY

By SALLY MARTIN

Is It Wise to Have Child Despite Small Wages?

Are babies worth having?

Nanette's asking.

Frankly, she'd adore one. She's young, healthy, eager, and feels that she needs some one to work for, besides her husband Don and herself . . . something to do besides sit and look at the walls of their little apartment. . . . something to keep her idle hands busy and her heart full—

Small Salary

"Don't do it!" cry all their friends, the neighbors, and Don's family. "What do you want to go in for something like that for? Haven't you enough troubles already? If you do, you'll have to make endless sacrifices. You'll have to do without things you want, give up all your young good times together—and maybe endure dreadful heartaches if the child grows up to be a bad instead of a good citizen. Besides, what right have you to try to bring up a youngster on only $27 a week? Don't be silly!"

"And," she wails, "Don doesn't seem so enthusiastic about having a family, himself. So what'll I do?"

What do you say, stranger?

"Dear Miss Martin:

"I read your column every day, and I think you give people real, sensible, practical advice. So I'm coming to you in the hopes you'll give me some. My problem is this:

Friends Disapprove

"'To have—or not to have—a baby?'

"It may sound very simple to you, but I assure you that it has me baffled. To begin with, I know very well what I would like to do. I would just love to have one! And I would not feel hurt or abused if I did have to sacrifice for it, and work harder than I do now.

"Don and I have been married for two years now and, while he is a marvelous husband, he doesn't seem very enthusiastic about having a family. And to aggravate it all, his friends and his family try to tell him how awful foolish he would be to try to raise a youngster on his wages, which I'll admit don't amount to a whole lot—to be exact, just $27 a week. But I manage on that small sum right along. We have bought all our own furniture, and a second-hand car. So you see, I know a little about how to stretch money.

"Don is away from home a lot, in his business and, when he is, I really haven't anyone or anything to work for and to keep busy taking care of.

Wants Opinions

"We have fine times together, the two of us—which people try to tell us we won't have if we go in for a family. But honestly, couldn't we still be happy if we had our baby, too?

"Please, Sally, help me. Advise me what course to take. I am sincerely hoping that you will print this letter, and comment on it—and invite your readers to help me decide, too. I would like to know what other people think.

"NANETTE."

Well, how about it, Mom—Dad?

Shall she . . . or shan't she?

Will she and Don find their happy companionship slipping away from them if they make it a threesome?

Or will home be brighter, and their companionship a more beautiful adventure if they take junior into partnership?

Think it over, and let's have your vote. And your budget.

What Are Spring Dreams Made Of?

Drawn by Nell Brinkley

What are maiden dreams in the spring made of? Right off you'd answer, of LOVE, of course. They are supposed to be always of Love; flocks of Cupids smiling chubbily, rosily through them. The flutter of cherub wings is supposed always to flutter through them. Perhaps they are—any other time of the year but this. But not in the spring.

Maybe the young man's fancy turns—you know where! But in a girl's spring slumbers Cupid is dethroned—crowded out—nose out of joint—and all that; and his place floats HATS. H-A-T-S!

Hats flit airily and entrancingly through Mimi's shut-eye hours. All kinds of hats—for this year they are specially seductive. Turbans, triconns, a new dodge in berets, caps, shepherdess pads, nose-veiled, up-and-down hats.

CORRECT MANNERS

By MRS. CORNELIUS BEECKMAN

Wedding Gifts After Postponement

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Last fall, a couple became engaged and they stated they would be married in January. In December they postponed the wedding indefinitely. Now they have received a wedding gift from an out-of-town relative who had not heard of the postponement. Should the gift be returned?

2. Was it their place to notify all their friends and relatives of the postponement, though the engagement had not been announced formally? They just told their friends and relatives as they met and let the news spread in that way. J. E.

1. Since the engagement has not been broken, I see no reason why the wedding present should be returned. After all, there isn't any set time for sending or receiving a wedding present. I suggest that the bride-to-be write, at once, the sender of the present and explain very definitely the indefinite postponement of the marriage. I am sure that the relative would not wish to have the present returned. I must emphasize, however, that the note that is written must be an especially definite and gracious one.

2. Since no formal invitations had been sent there wasn't any reason why they should have formally notified their friends. The preliminaries were so casual that I think they did a consistent thing in making the postponement-announcement as casual as they did.

When Entertaining the Husband's Boss

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Can you please tell me where to seat a male guest if he happens to be your husband's boss. Does he sit at the host's right or to the right of the hostess? Also where should you seat his assistant?

2. How does one govern oneself as to the seating of other guests at dinner? Does one separate the couples and are place cards necessary?

MRS. S.

1. Your husband's employer will be your guest of honor and so he should be placed in the correct place for the guest of honor . . . the seat at the right of the hostess.

The employer's assistant would be given the second place of honor, at the left of the hostess.

2. A wife and her husband should not be seated next to each other at a dinner party.

Place cards are not necessary for a small party, but they may be used, if you wish. For a large party they are, obviously necessary and convenient. And place cards, incidentally, should be very simple ones—plain white or ivory-toned are best.

She Shouldn't Wear "False Colors"

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

I would appreciate your advising me whether it is permissible for a young girl who has been married secretly to wear a bridal veil at a religious ceremony which she has decided to have a few months later?

RUTH.

This is not good form, since it is not honest. The bridal veil, like orange blossoms and the white bridal dress, are symbols for the first ceremony. For a girl to wear bridal regalia when she has been married before is for her to sail under false colors.

Oh, These Women

By LEOLA ALLARD

"So there are some human beings left in this world after all," says the wife of the cashier of a bank that failed recently. She wrote to praise the intelligence and understanding of the stenographer who wrote me that small town gossips were driving him to his grave, an innocent banker whose institution failed in her city. The stenographer lost her money, but she knew it wasn't his fault. She thought such gossip "frightfully wicked."

And when one of the depositors read that, she howled: and wrote me that the girl was in love with the banker, and that's why she defended him.

Now comes a letter from a woman in a different part of the country asking for the name of the stenographer.

"I didn't know there was anybody that human left in the world," writes Mrs. B. "My family and myself are the victims of just such malicious gossip as this girl mentions. My husband happened to be the cashier of one bank that failed in September, and God alone knows all we have suffered since—most of the sorrow caused by small town gossip.

"We didn't even own a car, but they say we lived above our means, and now they call attention to the fact that we own an electric ice box and an electric range. One is so helpless in such a situation and yet we are all innocent of any wrong doing. It would be impossible to make any of the losing depositors feel for us, so it's a bitter situation. I'd so love to know that young woman."

I'm so sorry that I can't give addresses, but it's a rule I must observe if I am to have the confidence of my readers.

It is a bitter thing to lose one's life savings and I can understand how the depositors feel. It is human to want to FIX THE BLAME, and easy to be unjust. I can't think of a situation more hopeless than that of the wives of these bankers. If they have used someone's money not knowing it, they must be crushed with shame. If they know their husbands are not guilty and they must be pointed at with the guilty, it's heartbreaking. To be accused by your community of being a hard-hearted thief and treated like an outcast is pretty terrible. But there are always a few like the stenographer who understand.

People lose anything with better grace than they lose MONEY, even if it is written that one who steals a purse steals trash. The easiest thing to do, is to despise a rich man whom you discover has gone wrong or is up against misfortune. It's difficult to like people who are much more successful than you are, and when you find that these same people are the authors of your undoing, HOW you can hate them!

The Beauty Box

By HELEN FOLLETT

Liver spots have obstinate dispositions. They give way only to bleaches strong enough to remove the epidermis. Some of them are transient guests, coming in the summertime like freckles and departing when the hands and complexions are no longer exposed to wind or sunlight.

That woman who has corns on her little toes, and big toes with ingrowing nails, should buy a pair of wide, low-heeled sports shoes and wear them in the house. They will give the foot a chance to unhuddle itself and, as pressure is relieved, foot ills will pack up and depart. Her feet will have a happy holiday.

A foolish idea is to the effect that when hair is cut it bleeds. That's a lot of bunkum. Cutting does nothing to the growth of the hair, which gets its groceries from the blood streams of the scalp. If cutting were a help we'd have no bald-headed men deploring lack of hirsute foliage. Scalp massage is a tresslock stimulant.

If the mamma of the family is to stay young and pretty, with flashlights in her eyes and ginger in her heels, she must get out of the old diggings once a day, lap in the fresh air, keep her spirits high. Monotony is the enemy of good looks. Wives grow dull and glistening youth departs when they see always the same walls, have always the same old problem of what to get for dinner and no diversions. Mothers live best for their children when they also live a bit for themselves.

Thin hands will be benefited by applications of lanolin or cocoabutter. Either one will encourage the under padding of soft tissues to fill out, and will do away with lines caused by emaciation.

Round shoulders are the result of laziness; the woman who has them is too inert to carry herself properly. When the spinal column is held erect and hips are thrown back, the line of the back is smooth and straight. Round shoulders not only depress the walls of the chest, but plunge the head forward and furrow in deep lines around the neck.

Dicky Invites Veritzen to Dinner.

Dicky had his hand upon Veritzen's arm as the two men walked toward us, giving a curious impression of steering him in our direction. Both men's faces wore their usual expressions, but Dicky's eyes were dancing with merriment, while Philip Veritzen's held a faint hint of surprised wonder. That Dicky had been "up to something," in his mother's parlance, I was sure, and did not have long to wait for the answer.

"This man," Dicky began, when they had stopped by our sofa, "this man, being a stickler for social conventions, will not accept an invitation of mine unless it is also extended by you. I tried to tell him that you and I were one, and all that rot, but—"

There was a look almost of embarrassment in Mr. Veritzen's eyes, and, with my pulses increasing their tempo, I speculated fantastically upon this invitation Dicky was extending. Could it be possible—I took refuge in simulated laughing pettiness.

"Will you cut off all the trimmings and tell me what you mean?" I demanded, and my husband swept me a low obeisance, his hand clasping an imaginary plumed hat to his heart.

"She is so direct, this lady of mine," he said to Mr. Veritzen, as he straightened to a standing posture. "It's very simple." He turned to me. "This good friend of ours, having a yen for Christmas in the country, is planning, he tells me, to go down to Long Island for the holidays. As Noel is already with us, I tried to persuade him to stay with us. But that he insists is impossible. He is wedded, he tells me, to hotel routine, and when I remembered the four noisy boys who are domiciled with us, I did not press that question. But I insist, and I know you will, too, my dear, that he at least eat his Christmas dinner with us. Anything else would be unspeakably heathenish."

Dicky had solved my problem. With a little glad rush of affection I realized that. Lillian had told me that Mr. Veritzen would hint for an invitation to Christmas dinner, but she had thought that he would utter the hint to me, and I had been torn with apprehensive speculation as to how Dicky would react to such an addition to our Christmas dinner table. And here it was, Dicky himself, who not only was relieving me of any anxiety concerning his own reaction, but had deftly made it impossible for Mr. Veritzen to imagine any jealousy on his part over the prospect of making the great man one of the family dinner party.

There could be nothing so perfect as Dicky's manner as he spoke of the invitation he had given. If Philip Veritzen had been the greatly beloved and revered president of the college from which Dicky had graduated his tone could have been no more deferential, his invitation seemingly no more heartfelt and eager. I glowed with pride in him and resolved to second his efforts with all the aplomb I could muster.

"Why, of course," I said, looking directly at my employer. "You cannot imagine Dicky and I would permit you to do anything else, do you?"

I stood up and put my hand confidingly on my husband's arm.

"I'm so glad you found out about it, dear," I cooed. "I never should have forgiven myself if Mr. Veritzen had spent Christmas Day anywhere else but at the farmhouse. We should love to have you with us during the whole holiday season." I went on with a timely remembrance of the comparison between the ropes on the necks of a sheep and of a lamb. "But as my husband says, those four boys—" I spread my hands expressively. "But can you not come down for Christmas breakfast and stay throughout the day?"

Mr. Veritzen, ever since Dicky had stopped talking, had worn the slightly dazed look of one who has been listening to a speech in a foreign language. But at my question his eyes lighted and he smiled.

"I have not yet decided to impose myself upon you for dinner," he said, "and you are talking about breakfast."

"Impose yourself!" Dicky's tone was sharp with disapproval. "Those are not the words to be used concerning an invitation from us for Christmas dinner. There is no question of imposition. You may be very sure that if we did not wish you to accept the invitation we should not have proffered it."

There was just the right touch of offended dignity in Dicky's tones, and I wondered if he felt as much like Ananias as I did like Sapphira when I added earnestly:

"Surely, Mr. Veritzen, you are not going to be so cruel as to refuse to come to us on Christmas day?"

Children's Feet

Attention should be paid to the growing feet of children so they will not suffer from poor feet when they grow up. When possible it is wise to buy child's shoes at the same store, so that he can wear the same last all the time his feet are growing. A reliable store will take care of the increase in size as the child grows. Frequently it does not pay to have children's shoes repaired, but allow that money on a new pair of shoes, as many children have feet that grow so quickly that the repaired shoes will not fit long enough to have them wear out.

Horoscopes

Sunday, April 5

Sunday's horoscope assists to much activity and advantage to things ecclesiastical, mystical and mysterious, especially as they relate to labor, secret undertakings or literary pursuits. Things of the unusual, singular or psychic, may complexion the activities of the day. Be careful with finances.

Those whose birthday it is may look for a year in which the unusual, the marvelous or intriguing may figure, although there is promise of solid benefits from practical effort and application. Writing or literary work may develop subtle aspects or point to methods of secrecy or intrigue.

A child born on this day should be studious, earnest and practical, at the same time leaning to the occult, singular idealistic, inclining to literary work of such nature.

Monday, April 6

Monday's astrological forecast is a most important one, pointing to a sudden if not revolutionary change in the affairs, reacting on the environment with abrupt and powerful force, and being of far-reaching influence on the life. Employment, new undertakings, the purely private relations and affairs in general are to feel the effect of this quite unplanned and unforeseen chain of events. The faculties and energies will be under high stimulus and may be expected to direct circumstances into safe and profitable channels despite high pressure. But there will be some adverse situations and hostility to safely pilot into desired places.

Those whose birthday it is are on the brink of a very important year, with radical and sudden change, affecting all interests—personal and business. It seems like an opportunity for great adventure and enterprise, with the spirits under high pressure for engineering big deals into safe and advantageous fastnesses, despite opposition and adversity.

A child born on this day should be energetic, brave, adventurous and creative in original lines and should attain high position by its ingenuity and intiative.

Household Hints

See that your measuring cups and spoons are standard, and make all measurements level. Any recipe may fail if measurements are not accurate.

Does the youngster ever trip over his hanging shoestring? Try this method: When lacing the shoes, upon reaching the top eyelet, instead of lacing from the inside out. Reverse the method. Then tie securely and tuck well down within the shoe.

A smooth and creamy cup of cocoa is a perenially palatable beverage but when served in a cup in which the cocoa has lumped it is a dissappointing experience. If a little sugar is added to the cocoa while it is dry and then a little boiling water or hot milk is poured over this mixture a smooth paste is made. When added to the hot milk, it will be found that the cocoa will be readily dissolved.

Slice a lemon with the rind into the boiler of clothes. It will make the clothes beautifully white and take stains out of pocket handkerchiefs, underwear and table linen.

Discarding a housedress just because the sleeves have pulled out or the bodice is showing the strain of wear, is quite an extravagance. For it is probable that the skirt of the garment is in a very good condition. Utilize the material by making kitchen aprons of the skirt portion.

White window shades that have become soiled are a problem unless one knows this simple method of cleaning them. Unroll the shades and spread on a sheet on the floor. Scrub with a soft cloth dipped in magnesia and water. Treat both sides in the same way. Allow to remain on the sheet until dry.

How to Keep Well

By DR. ROYAL S. COPELAND

Health Value of Simpler Foods

From letters received I judge it is time for another article on constipation. This is so common an ailment that new readers demand suggestions regarding its management.

Dr. Copeland

Among women, particularly, this trouble is almost universal. It is really distressing to learn what a lot of purging, "internal bathing," and special dieting are indulged in by the victims of constipation.

Let me inquire: Is it not possible that the rather vague and uncomfortable abdominal symptoms many persons have are due rather to their efforts to overcome constipation than to the condition itself?

The practice of taking a dose of medicine, an oil of some sort, bran and all that sort of thing, may actually be at fault for the symptoms. The laxative habit is a bad habit.

Certainly, if these "anti-constipation" things are taken every day it is impossible to determine whether the discomfort is due to the "treatment," or really comes from the sluggishness of the symptoms. Think about it a bit.

If you have done these common things for a long time, let me suggest that you set them aside for a time. Leave off the eating of coarse foods and take the common things for a while.

In spite of oft-repeated advice, there is a steadfast determination to clean the system not only once but several times daily. Yet it must be admitted that lots of apparently healthy persons obtain voiding only every second day, or even every third or fourth day.

Some time we will discuss this matter more at length, but at this point I wish to quote a few words from the book of a really great physician, Dr. Walter C. Alverez, of the Mayo Clinic. We won't pass judgment on this conclusion, but the statement deserves serious thought. Here is the quotation:

"Some people eat so little or eat such concentrated food that it may be two days or more before voiding is necessary; and others, perhaps, have such an efficient system that it absorbs almost everything and leave little to be voided. It seems to me that such men and women should not attempt to clear the system every day; nature did not intend that they should, and the physician must refrain from meddling."

Answers to Health Queries

S. O. Q.—What do you advise for the removal of freckles? Are they healthy?

A.—Equal parts of lemon juice and peroxide will act as a bleach for freckles. Since the preparation may prove drying, it might be wise to use a good cold cream after each application. They are supposed to be an indication of health. Freckles are usually found where the skin is of a thin and delicate texture.

* * *

C. R. Q.—What would you advise for a patient who, although examined and X-rayed for stomach trouble, will not follow the instructions which have been outlined for her case, and refuses to believe that her trouble is not due to some serious disease or ailment? She is nervous, irritable and troubled with chronic constipation.

A.—She should be treated for neurasthenia. Proper elimination should do much toward improving her general condition and outlook. Careful diet and exercise will help toward this end.

* * *

H. N. Q.—How can I gain weight?

A.—Eat plenty of good nourishing food, including milk, eggs, fresh fruits and vegetables, cereals and plenty of water between meals. Sleep as many hours as possible. Avoid worry and overfatigue.

* * *

A.—No.

* * *

2.—What can be done for pimples and blackheads?

A.—Cutting down on sweets and starches and taking plenty of exercise should bring about general results.

2.—Correct the diet and be sure that the system is kept clear.

V. G. Q.—What causes a pain in the chest and around the shoulder blade?

AGED SYRACUSE EDUCATOR DIES

SYRACUSE, N. Y., April 4.—(AP.)—Dr. Frank Smalley, a member of the first class graduated from Syracuse University, and since then a member of the faculty, died here last night. He was 84 and death was attributed to old age.

Dr. Smalley was born in Towanda, Pa., in 1846. After attending Susquehanna Collegiate Institute at Towanda, he entered Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., transferring later to Syracuse, then a university in name only, with 40 students.

After graduation he became an instructor in the growing institution, later serving as professor, department head, college dean and twice acting chancellor.

$100,000 LOSS IN KANE FIRE

KANE, Pa., April 4.—(AP.)—A large building in the Kane business district was destroyed by fire last night and two others damaged. The loss, fire department officials estimated, was approximately $100,000. Origin of the fire was undetermined.

The building at Fraley and Greeves streets, occupied and owned by the Ray Five Cent to Five Dollar Store Company, was destroyed. It was a two-story brick structure covering half a block. The second floor was utilized as office space.

A two-story brick building owned by Mrs. John Block and occupied by a bowling alley on the first floor and living apartments on the second, was scorched. A one-story structure rented by the Grand Union Tea Company was damaged by water and smoke.

Mt. Jewett firemen aided the local department.

Prisoner Granted Leave to Raise Crop

OKLAHOMA CITY, April 4.—(AP.)—Acting on the plea of Mrs. William Peters, who hitch-hiked here from McAlester, Gov. W. H. Murray granted a leave of absence until July 15 for her husband so he can "go home and make a crop."

Mrs. Peters told the Governor that just before Christmas four adults in the family drew lots to see who would steal chickens so the children might have a "good dinner." Peters was selected and was caught. He pleaded guilty and was sentenced to three years in prison.

The Stevenson-Williams Company, Mt. Lebanon realtors, has sold for Dr. DeWitt Hall to W. A. Powell, a lot 60x200 feet in Longuevue drive, Mt. Lebanon. Powell expects to erect a home on the property. The same brokers have sold for Caste Brothers, builders, an English stone dwelling of seven rooms and two baths in Longuevue drive, Beverly Heights plan to Wilhelmine S. Hermann. This deal was consummated by T. B. Frye. Frye has also sold for Ira H. Shaffer a 2½-story brick and stucco residence containing eight rooms and garage, in Parkway drive, Mission Hills plan, to Fred G. Fleischauer.

An eight-room stone house with three baths, Roycroft avenue, Mt. Lebanon, has been sold by the Dunn-Salkeld Company, builders, to Gus J. Linder, through the offices of the Ben F. Home building in Crescent Hills, adjoining Frankstown road, Penn Township, is expected to reach a new high this season, according to Porter Beck, downtown realtor and developer of that new residential district. Among the most attractive of new homes now under construction is a stone house owned by Frederick M. Luchs. Plans for another home have been completed by Earl McKim. The 125 acres comprising Crescent Hills have been divided into building lots varying in size from 60x150 feet to a half acre. Business buildings are permitted on only a limited number of lots. Another restriction prohibits the construction of an all-frame dwelling.

14-Foot Shark, Impaled, Stops Steamer

PORTLAND, Ore., April 4.—(AP.)—A huge shark stopped the steamer Dewey off Cape Mears on the Oregon Coast, officers of the vessel reported upon their arrival here.

Disregarding navigation rules, the shark crossed the Admiral Dewey's bow and was impaled upon the ship's stem. It was necessary to stop the ship to free the fish. The shark's movements after it was freed indicated it was badly injured. The officers estimated the length of the shark at 14 feet.

Cape Mears is near Tillamook and the officers said they never before had seen a large shark so far north.

AUTO KILLS MAN, 2 BOYS HURT

Armin Goldberg, 60, of 7201 Frankstown avenue, was killed when struck by a truck owned by the Excelsior Bottling Company, of 835 Fulton street, at Penn avenue and Tenth street, late yesterday. # FLIERS PERILED BY FOG HERE

A navy plane, flying low over the city with a visibility of only 100 feet, spent almost half an hour searching for a landing place at Bettis Field yesterday. For a time it was feared that the ship, which was piloted by Lieut. R. E. Blick, was in distress. Lieut. Blick was accompanied from Philadelphia by Lieut. Nicholas Prosel. The low visibility, Blick explained, was a local condition, their flight over the mountains being made without accident.

Vet Loan Payment Reaches $375,000,000

WASHINGTON, April 4.—(AP.)—Veterans' Administrator Hines said that by the time checks have been mailed for this week, the total paid out for veterans' loans would amount to approximately $375,000,000.

Coming from a conference with President Hoover, Hines said the bureau had in sight applications amounting to $820,000,000, and that he saw no reason for revising his previous estimate that the loan act would cost the government $1,000,000,000.

Texas Senate Votes For Sunday Shows

AUSTIN, Tex., April 4.—(AP.)—A move toward abolition of Texas' ban on Sunday amusements was made when the Senate passed, 15 to 8, a bill to permit operation of theaters on the Sabbath. The bill contained a local option provision.

HOOVER TO CALL SILVER PARLEY

WASHINGTON, April 4.—(Universal.)—President Hoover will call a conference of Treasury and Federal Reserve officials, bankers and businessmen, in the near future to consider ways to stabilize the price of silver, members of Congress learned today.

President Hoover has before him a request by the Senate, sponsored by Senator Pittman (Dem.), of Nevada, to call an international silver conference. It is proposed that India and other principal governments agree not to sell silver below a given price, which might be set at 50 cents an ounce.

The steady plunge in the price of silver automatically has reduced the purchasing power of over 800,000,000 persons in silver-using countries such as India, Indo-China, China, Mexico and other Latin-American countries, Representative Samuel S. Arentz (Rep.), of Nevada, pointed out.

Silver also is believed to be one of the subjects Secretary of the Treasury Mellon will discuss with Gov. Montagu Norman, of the Bank of England, when he arrives here Monday.

Delight Asks for Time to Consider Proposal

CHAPTER XLIV.

Delight lay quite still against the pillows. Her face was quite impassive, save for a very slight dilation of the pupils of her tired, blue eyes. There was a short pause in which she fancied she could hear her heart beating. Safety, comfort, freedom from anxiety—all within the reach of a hand which for some years had not scrupled to take what was offered. She said, finally:

"Sit down, Lorry; I want to talk to you."

Lorrimer obeyed, taking a low chintz-covered chair beside the bed. Delight looked about the room, a very pleasant room, in which everything spoke to her, mutely, of shelter. Two courses lay open and apparent before her. She could speak one short word and life would be made quite simple for her.

She turned her eyes to the man's grave face. A very attractive man, Lorrimer. Much more attractive than the boy he had been. Mature, worthwhile. Yes, very much more attractive than that forgotten boy, thought the woman who had had plenty of unsought opportunity to readjust her sense of values in the past few years. A man whom it would be quite easy to care for.

Speaks of Past

She said, lightly:

"Such a chivalrous gesture isn't really necessary, Lorry."

"Yes, it is, I think. You don't know me. Nor I you. We are ten, eleven years removed from that London leave. Good title for a war play, isn't it, 'London Leave?'" She laughed a little but her eyes remained somber. "I was a kid then, Lorry, a rather badly brought up kid. A brat, if you like. Resenting the dull pettiness of two good-hearted but entirely commonplace spinsters, resenting the mess I thought my mother had selfishly made of her life and my own; and therefore welcoming the excitement, the sudden freedom of war time. Ready, too, to fall head over heels in love with the first youngster who fell in love with me. I wonder," she asked, driven to honesty by some basic craving within herself, "I wonder, Lorry, if it would have lasted?"

Lorrimer looked at her in wonder. After a moment he said:

"That is what she—Mary Lou—" he hesitated over the name, "asked me."

"When?"

"Long ago, when I thought she was—you."

"Almost any clear-sighted person would ask that," Delight remarked, "given some idea of the circumstances. Look here, I only saw that girl twice, once very briefly, but I can understand, I think, what sort of a character she gave me while she was understudying me. Don't delude yourself that I'm like that for, very probably, I'm not. And, in a sense, she made me up out of whole cloth, no matter what cues she had from you. She wrote her own part. For the girl you knew in London hadn't much character, to speak of, either good or bad."

"When she came to me and pitched me that amazing yarn I thought I must be dreaming. I—I wouldn't have considered turning up again, I would have let you all get out of the entanglement as best you could if she had not told me that your mother was very much against having me produced, so to speak. That annoyed me. It would annoy anyone. I don't think, however, I had any particular designs—" she laughed again—"on you or anyone else when I promised Mary Lou to wait a week, while she tried to persuade Mrs. Lorrimer to see what she called 'justice.' She's awfully young. What an idiot you were, Lorry, not to have seen how young she is! You must have thought I'd found the fountain of youth somewhere. Well, I didn't," she interpolated. "But I came out here out of pure curiosity; I hadn't a thought of crashing the gate. Not I! It was unfortunate, for you, especially, that you are so fond of nature you permit those wood paths of yours to grow hidden roots. I couldn't help turning my idiotic ankle. And that's that."

Mother's Hostility

"Whether you meant to have us find you or not," said Lorrimer, "we have found you."

"If I married you, Lorry—mind you, I'm not saying I shall—I would have your mother's hostility to battle with, all the rest of my life."

"My mother hasn't had a chance to know you yet," he told her quietly. "You must remember that when I returned to her from the war, she had heard nothing from me in months. And I returned pretty much of a wreck, mentally and physically, with just one thought in my mnd, to find you again; with the fixed idea that we had been married, that you were my wife. It was considerable of a shock to her; and when, after engaging agents to search for the record of the marriage and for word of you, she discovered absolutely nothing, she quite naturally became convinced that if you ever had existed, you existed no longer, and that we were not married. The deception she and Dr. Mathews undertook when Mary Lou, with her resemblance to you, came here, was undertaken solely because they felt that my condition called for it, and so didn't, I suppose, look very far ahead—"

"You don't blame them, then, or her?" she asked, curiously.

"No. Not now. But it couldn't have continued much longer," he answered, staring out of the window at the moving pattern of tree branches against the clear, blue sky. "I think they imagined that, gradually, as I became more like myself, I would begin to question more closely and perhaps come to the right conclusion by myself. I don't believe, however, that I would have ever done so. I think that the encounter with you was the only cure. Strong medicine," he said, with half a smile. "I wouldn't live again through those few bewildered seconds when I saw you and heard you speak again, for anything I know of. My entire world was turned upside down. There seemed no foothold in it, no sanity. But it was best for us all that it happened."

Doesn't Love Delight

"Was it? I wonder?" Delight turned her head, forced his eyes down on her own. "Lorry, there's no use being chivalrous and all that. You don't want me. You don't love me. For a time, you loved a memory. But not me."

"Oh, be honest with me, Lorry! Isn't that the most important thing we have left to give each other?"

But she flushed as she said it. For she had not given him honesty. Not yet, and thought, fleetingly and rather tragically, that if he denied her accusations she might close her eyes to everything else and try to believe him, and so forget her own integrity.

"No," said Lorrimer finally, "I don't love you, Delight. I loved the girl you were, a long time ago, and then, as you said, her memory."

"And since then," she probed, with a sharp stab of authentic jealousy which she was unable to conquer, "since then, you've loved the understudy of that memory, have you not?"

"I don't know," he answered, miserably.

Delight watched him. There was pity in her eyes and a sort of cynical resignation.

"Why not?" she asked him. "Come, Lorry; let's be perfectly frank. When you saw Mary Lou again and thought her Delight Harford you, I suppose, experienced no shock, no alteration, in your emotions, I mean. You just went on loving—me, in her. But here I am. You couldn't go on loving her as me; could you go on loving her as herself?"

He said slowly:

"How much of that girl did I know, Delight? How much of her was Mary Lou Thurston and how much a very clever little actress playing the part of Delight Harford as she conceived it?"

Repeats Request

"She'll have to tell you that," Delight answered.

"I'm not likely ever to see her again," he told her.

"No? That wasn't the impression your mother and Dr. Mathews gave me," she said.

"Why should I see her," he asked violently, "with all that there has been between—?" he stopped, and said abruptly, almost formally, "I fancy she would rather I didn't see her. The situation is, after all, almost fantastic."

"So, will you marry me, Delight? You have asked me if I love you, and I answered you honestly. I won't ask you if you care for me; I know that you do not. But—do you care for anyone else?"

"I might ask you that," she murmured; "in fact, I have! No, Lorry."

"Then—will you marry me?" he asked again. "We loved each other once. We have, I think, something to build on. I—do not know," he said, and stopped to smile at her, in a sudden, whimsical astonishment, "I am really very fond of you, Delight. I just found that out! I think perhaps I could make you happy. At all events I could take you away from a lot of things which I don't believe you like very much, and do my best to make you a good husband. I don't suppose I'm offering much."

"Too much," she answered, after a pause. "You'll have to let me think it over. I'm not going to rush you—or myself—into something we might regret. There's your mother to reckon with, too. No, I won't answer you now. But will you do something for me, Lorry?"

DAILY TRUE STORY — Down and Out

Cartoonist Humiliates Rich Wife Before Guests

"I don't see anything of Manson now," I said.

"What do you expect? Didn't we warn him, didn't we tell him just what would happen?"

In the old days there had been four of us. We had a suite of rooms, large living room, four bedrooms, two baths and a kitchenette. No four men in college—anyway, we rated ourselves as men in those days—were ever situated more comfortably.

There was Thad Parker, handsome, witty, and with a head full of figures. He was going to become the world's greatest C. P. A., and I mean Certified Public Accountant.

He was sent to the coast to straighten out the O. G. W. Producing Company's finances in relation to an income tax mix-up with Uncle Sam. He straightened it out and old man Weston had a hunch that Thad would make a great movie star.

Thad laughed at him. He had trained to be a C. P. A. I was with him out there then, pretending to turn some of my stories into pictures.

"I'm making fifteen thousand now, in five years I'll be making thirty thousand," Thad said.

So that's how we lost Thad.

Talks of Old Times

Bert Ranson—he used to have trouble because his name was so much like Manson—was the second of our college quartet. Bert intended to become a merchant prince. It wasn't such a tough job for him because his father owned three of the largest department stores in the country. So he became a merchant prince.

Jack Manson was poor. I mean he had no income from home. He was earning his way, and doing pretty well. Jack wanted his college course because he believed that an artist—even only a cartoonist—could do better work if he knew something. Jack was doing advertising illustrations for his steady income and a few free-lance comics for his luxuries.

So there you have the quartet. I never intended to write the Great American Novel. I never did. I kept plugging along, writing under a dozen pen names and being able to pay the bootlegger every week and the grocer almost all the time.

I happened to be visiting Bert Ranson and we were talking of old times. That is how I mentioned to him that I hadn't seen anything of Manson of late.

Bert was in his city home. Twice a year he is in his city home, which is in March, between Florida and Maine, and in November, between Maine and Florida.

If he had paid rent on this home it would cost him a fortune, for it was a duplex penthouse 41 stories up. But as he owned the block which held up his penthouse I suppose he wasn't worried about that.

Clever Signature

We had been sitting in the glassed-in roof terrace talking over old times, staring across the housetops and out at the lower harbor.

I happened to glance at a framed cartoon of Bert and myself in female attire, commemorating a college play we were in. Manson had done it. Hence my thoughts drifted to him.

"I know you warned him, Bert," I said, "and so did I."

"Yep," Bert agreed.

"Why, not so many years ago it seemed that half the cartoons were signed with a little silhouette of a man against a rising sun," I said.

Bert grinned.

"That was a clever signature—man, sun—Manson.

"He was doing pretty well," I went on, "and then he met the Quare girl. I don't think he ever really loved her."

"Nope. Martha Quare was a most considerate girl."

"What do you mean, Bert, considerate?"

Bert nodded.

"We told him," he went on, "that marrying money would make him lazy, make him give up his cartoon work—"

He tried to think of what we had told him.

"I recall that I told him that he would just be Martha's husband, he would lose his identity and be forgotten. See how it turned out? Haven't seen a Manson cartoon in five years."

"Nope—not a one," Bert agreed.

"The last time I saw him I was nervous as a cat," I said. "It was in a place something like this penthouse of yours—that is, it was up some forty stories and the place covered half the roof. Boy, the dog they put on. Not Jack, he was the same old Jack, but his wife sure ritzed me for fair. She had two butlers, I remember, to help take care of my $30 overcoat and $3 hat. The way they looked at them made me feel like a bum. And a Jap boy served drinks."

Bert began to laugh.

"I never think of Jack's wife but what I think of the story about the snooty dame who never had her diamonds cleaned—when they got dirty she threw them out and got new ones," he said.

"Well, we were right, weren't we? He stopped doing cartoons. Wealth spoiled him—he got lazy."

"Nope—wrong. Jack didn't have a lazy streak in him. He thought he was fond of Martha. He also thought he would have leisure to do some really fine work. And do you know what happened?"

"Sure I know," I said. "He sat back and lived on his wife's money and let two butlers, a valet, a Jap boy and 20 other servants wait on him."

"He did not. At least not at first. He tried to keep on with his cartoon work. And that wife of his simply wouldn't stand for it."

"I'd like to see anyone stop me from doing what I wanted to do," I scolded.

Makes Inquiries

"She made an awful fuss. She kept him on the run. Europe and back, Palm Beach and back, Bar Harbor and back—and her yacht—Gee, Jack got seasick on a ferryboat and it got so he didn't have a minute for his cartoons."

"It's a shame," I said, "just as his work was getting known and being copied and commented on. There was a time when Jack Manson's cartoons were even better known, than those we see everywhere now—you know—the ones by this chap Major."

"You have noticed these Major cartoons, then?"

"Noticed them? I bought the book of them. I have a lot of anniversary cards made up from them, and I find them staring at me from magazines and newspapers. Poor old Jack Manson might have been like that by this time if he had married some nice little girl without money and supported her."

"I suppose so," Bert agreed.

"Jack's probably seasick on his wife's yacht, headed for Egypt or Samoa or some place. When he dies, he'll get three lines, as the husband of the daughter of Silas M. Quade. Say, what has really become of him—just drifting around in a sea of money?"

"No," Bert answered.

"No? Then you know something about him? Isn't he still living up 40 stories in that gold-plated diamond-studded penthouse?"

"He is not."

"What about him, then?"

"Down and out!"

"It isn't much of a story," Bert said. "I'll let you in on it. He didn't get along any too well with Martha. He used to make breaks. He would get a little too jingled and tell her friends what he thought of them. Several times he told some of her women friends that they were all phoney."

"He would."

"At a banquet one night he told his wife loud enough for all her guests to hear that her bunch of gentleman friends were a lot of stuffed shirts."

Identity Revealed

"Well, Jack told me about it. He had a rather hot quarrel with his wife about this. She told him that she wouldn't stand for it. She pointed out that he had no money, brought her no money and lived on her money. She told him without her he would be a bum."

"So? Are you sure?"

"Well," Bert said, "I heard her tell him that but for her he would be down and out."

"And the sap left her and is down and out—or perhaps she fired him, kicked him out—is that it?"

Bert didn't answer directly.

"Jack's wife had a portrait done by Sergeski, the famous Russian portrait painter. It was excellent. I had seen it. Well, she gave a big reception and had the portrait hung and veiled. She was going to yank off the covering before the crowd and show it all swelled up with pride. I was there, although I had seen it before. Well, sir, there were 60 or 70 guests all waiting to see it. Martha signaled a servant, who pulled a cord and the cover dropped off. There was a picture of Martha, sitting on a pile of money, and kneeling at her feet was another picture of Martha, worshiping herself!"

"No!" I cried, with a hoot of delight.

"Yes, and Jack's signature was on it. He had painted and shifted pictures when his wife was out."

"Where was Jack all this time?" I asked.

"Down and out—down stairs and out of doors, to stay out. He's living out in the country now, doing cartoons and signing himself 'Major.'"

MODERN CINDERELLA OFFERS SELF TO CHARITY

WASHINGTON, April 4. — Congressman Horace Frisby, who terms himself "The Modern Cinderella of 1931," today announced a novel campaign to raise campaign funds. He will distribute one of his bedroom slippers (pictured above) to some lucky girl to be chosen blindfolded at a mass meeting Saturday night. The winner will be permitted to crochet a mate to the slipper. The pair will then be returned to Mr. Frisby, who will give three cheers for the popular young lady in public and declare her Queen of the Frisby Campaign Committee. The slippers will then be auctioned off to posterity.

Hail, Glorious Easter!

Solemn Lenten Period Preliminary to Great Christian Festival—Brief Comment on Various Topics.

Lent ends today, ushering in the greatest Christian festival except Christmas—Easter. The period just closing has been one in which hundreds of thousands have paused and reflected on the scenes attending the final days of Christ on earth, sharing vicariously some of His sorrows. As Lent is symbolic of the Tomb, so is Easter a symbol of the Resurrection. The end of the Lenten season finds countless reverent citizens eager to partake of the glorious significance of Easter.

Albert Horne Burchfield is 60 today. Those 60 years of his life include a majority that have been devoted to the active duties of citizenship and a mercantile business that has expanded in about the same ratio as the city has grown, and whose life corresponds to the period of the important development of the community. So some of his friends in business and civic circles are giving him a testimonial dinner tonight, to be presided over by a business competitor, Edgar J. Kaufmann.

Some surprising facts about the operations of buildings owned by the city and county have been brought to light by the Building Owners' and Managers' Association. Council has been told that expenses at the Diamond Market could be cut from $75,645 a year to $46,118. It is time for the management of these properties to be put on a business-like basis.

Discussion of proposals to lease the wharves to pri- vate firms has brought to light the fact that the city is getting only a small share of the possible revenue from the parking of cars along the rivers. While the advisability of putting the wharves into private hands is doubtful, it is quite certain that the city should take steps to handle parking more efficiently.

With the transfer of Col. Jarvis J. Bain from his post as District Engineer in Pittsburgh to the command of the General Staff School at Fort Leavenworth, this city will lose a highly efficient executive. During the four years Col. Bain has been here more government structures have been built on the rivers than in any similar period in the past.

With the coming of warm weather traffic on Bige- low boulevard and the Boulevard of the Allies is increasing and congestion during rush hours is becoming serious. The problem of providing better means of handling the heavy flow of cars into the triangle in the early morning hours is deserving of careful consideration by the Traffic Committee.

The plan of securing an independent appraisal of the Pittsburgh and West Virginia bridge and tunnel, to be purchased by the county and converted into a highway, shows excellent judgment on the part of the Commissioners. While the property will make it possible for the city to materially improve the movement of traffic to the South Hills at a comparatively low cost, it must be remembered that the bridge and tunnel are white elephants as far as the railroad is concerned, and the county is the only possible buyer. This should be a factor in setting the price.

Repartee in Council sometimes is most puzzling. Former Controller Evans, a few days ago, responding to a charge by Councilman English, said it was contemptible and a dirty lie to boot. "Just like the dirty lies you told over the radio in your campaign," Mr. English is reported to have retorted. Just what did he mean to admit, anyway?

Testing of equipment ordinarily is a routine mat- ter—setting it up and starting it to going to see if it works properly. But in the case of a seismograph test, it is entirely up to nature. The instrument for detecting earthquakes, installed at Pitt three weeks ago, got its test in Nicaraguan temblor—and behaved satisfactorily.

The United States Steel Corporation this week rounded out 30 years of existence as the largest industrial enterprise in the world. Once the world looked with certain amazement upon the men who, as Andrew Carnegie's "partners," were made wealthy by the big steel merger. Now thousands of the "partners" in the steel corporation are its employes.

It is gratifying to note that Harry A. Little, acting chairman of Council, and William H. Colvin, assistant district attorney, have promised that witnesses in Council's investigation of the Department of Public Works will be fully protected. Former Controller Evans had charged that one of his witnesses had been intimidated by a contractor with a threat of no work if he testified further. It also would be gratifying to see some members of Council sitting in this hearing conduct themselves in a judicial manner instead of acting as if they were counsel for the "defendant."

City Controller Kerr makes an interesting sugges- tion in expressing a hope that the city soon may acquire the plant of the South Pittsburgh Water Company within the city. The municipal water rate is lower than that of the company and it is costing the city $700,000 a year to supply thousands of its residents in the South Hills water supplied by the company, Mr. Kerr asserts. The saving of that sum is something to think about.

The County Salary Board will be commended by most persons, one assumes, for having refused to grant salary increases totaling $234,000 for about 100 employes. All three Commissioners expressed themselves that this is no time for increasing salaries. That is especially true when it is considered that many taxpayers, who foot the bill, have no salaries at all, or incomes greatly curtailed by intermittent employment.

A series of lectures on art has been planned to be presented in Carnegie Lecture Hall, beginning next Thursday, April 9, all to be open to the public. That is something most of us need to know more about—art. Pittsburgh has a fine art gallery, and better knowledge of what is contains would be a fine thing for all of us.

Brig. Gen. Smedley D. Butler, asked by a reporter if he would like to come to Pittsburgh to clean it up, replied that he is too busy. Our inactive city administration also is too busy, but some day, soon, one hopes, some person, or group of persons, will be found ready for the task.

His fame came to him through success as a football coach, a maker of winning football teams. His greatness sprang from his intelligence and character. He was a sportsman of a high order. He exemplified the American genius for teamwork.

He did more to make American football a real contest of strategy than anybody else.

Rockne held that a certain amount of athletics invigorated the body, trained initiative and helped the brain—if the students had any gift for athletics at all.

Notre Dame in its winning years stood high in scholarship. Rockne had a respect for learning. He was himself an instructor in chemistry. He thought it wasn't playing the game right to neglect the proper duty of a student—to learn.

"Play the game right, boys. But remember—it's just a game."

Two Pictures of Same Girl

Take Your Choice, Which Would You Marry If They Were NOT the Same Girl?

MILLE. JEANNE JUILLA—TWO PICTURES OF SAME GIRL.

This calm, well-made, intelligent girl was chosen as the most beautiful in France and in all Europe.

The judges must choose among those that present themselves as competitors and many stay at home that are far more beautiful than any competing. Those that don't compete possess the most beautiful of all qualities, in a young woman, MODESTY.

The two pictures of Mlle. Juilla (above) will enable you to judge of a young man's common sense.

FRL. INGRID RICHARD, "MISS GERMANY."

MISS BETTY MASON, "MISS ENGLAND."

Ask him, showing the two pictures, one with the quiet modest dress, the other looking like something hung up in a butcher shop, "Which of these two girls would you rather marry?" He won't know at first glance that the two pictures represent the same girl.

If the young man selects the girl fully clothed he is intelligent. If he selects the other he is foolish.

The greatest power in the world is imagination. And she who leaves nothing to the imagination, handicaps herself heavily.

This is no reflection on Miss Juilla, who had to let the judges know what she looked like, as nearly as possible, from head to foot. She probably would not have worn this low-back dress of her own accord.

Marry-Go-Round

By HELEN ROWLAND.

Lovers—and Others

The fact that a man enjoys kissing a woman never appears to be a proof that he is not in love with another woman. He may enjoy eating an orange, even though he much prefers a melon.

* * *

By the time a woman has succeeded in convincing a man that he was all wrong, she has usually succeeded in convincing him that he no longer loves her.

* * *

To a Young Sophisticate.

You can have your orchids, your roses—anything!
I prefer the daffodils that speak to me of Spring.

You may have your careless kisses, in a rumble seat;

You may have your whoopee—Youth is gone so soon!

You can have your light loves, quickly done and over—
Give me a strong love, and a lifetime lover!

* * *

A man loves the woman who throws him over, far better than the one who hangs onto him, and keeps him eternally reminding him of her "sacrifice."

* * *

woman endows him with the expert eye of a millinery designer and the critical taste of a fashion artist.

* * *

If some man isn't making a woman "suffer," she is usually suffering because she has no man to make her suffer. You can't rob a woman of her divine right to be a "martyr."

* * *

A girl may not object to being kissed just as a passing amusement, but she hates to have a man act as though that was why he did it.

* * *

The only way for a girl to be perfectly happy with any man is to let him suspect that she could be passably happy without him.

Isn't It So?

NEW YORK DAY BY DAY

By O. O. McIntyre

NEW YORK, April 4.—I am the type of weak-minded husband who goes shopping with his wife. And loves it. I even sit in hairdressing parlors pretending to read Harper's Bazaar while waiting for her. And by the way, there's grand eavesdropping in such joints for those cupping a sly ear.

Long before the clandestine amours of the town are broadcast—Hello Jenny and Alex in East Passaic!—to the 12 heart balm deciders in the jury box they are ringing in the corridors of coiffure salons. In a half hour's visit you know who's renting a duplex for who.

And you'd be astonished how many heads of beautiful hair I know the original color of. The way I fix up prepositions! As for face lifts, remind me some day after lunch to give you an earful. I know two recent hists that would hand you a sinking spell.

But the real fun is being a shopping "stooge." Of course, you have to take an awful beating carrying bundles and opening doors, but the lovely ladies you get to see in paddling from counter to counter. Types! Types! Types! There is, for instance, that languid type.

She moves toward you in those slow swoops like Isadora Duncan dying at the end of the dance. And just as you get ready to speak she turns and trills to someone away off: "And the car broke down and we didn't get home until after 3 o'clock."

Then she eyes you as one does a worm and with a mounting inflection inquires: "Yee-e-es?" I always choke up like a pink-faced boob and stammer: "I'm just with my wife." And trail off into a silly little chuckle—hu, hu, hu. (Sarcastic voice from the next room: "Listen, giggling at his own comedy!")

As a matter of fact I had to chuckle out loud so I'd know how to spell hu, hu, hu. What was I talking about? O yes, the languid sales girl. Well, she drooped so much while talking that I snapped my finger at a floorwalker and screamed: "Fetch Miss Garbo a chair!" That's me in a pinch—the trigger boy.

* * *

Then there is the type who knows what one wants better than the customer. Whatever is wanted you are told that nobody is wearing it this season. And I love Baird Leonard's reply to one of that sort. Said she: "Because everybody is not wearing it is exactly why I want it."

* * *

* * *

I got keyed up in a wakeful hour last night thinking about my experiences shopping with my wife. I thought I could rattle off a dandy column. But somehow I am hung up right here. A minute! Maybe if I relax . . . Those dots indicate walking into the other room and fooling with the dog. But it is no use. I don't think I can go ahead. I should tear it up and begin all over again. Yet there seems to me one or two fairly good trifles in it. I like that "Hello Jenny and Alex in East Passaic!" anyway.

* * *

I might stick in the story they used to tell about William — nee Willie—Collier on a shopping trip with his wife. An evening gown high in the front and extremely low in the back, was selected. "It is all right," said Collier, "but if she ever gets into it backward, how are the folks!" Still that's pretty old. Maybe I never was any good.

* * *

But don't quit! I just thought up something. They ought to keep those bareheaded boys out of the big stores or label them as customers. The other day in Macy's basement—and is that a prowler's paradise!—I pranced up to two lidless lads, mistaking them for floorwalking help, and inquired the way to oilcloths. Such looks!

I never did find oilcloths, but in one of my usual lucky blunders—a tot of Fortune, heigh, ho!—I stumbled onto some bath salts scented like the pine forests. And you wouldn't know me. Just a big breath of the great outdoors.

THE ZEPPELIN AS A FIGHTER

By Archibald Henderson

One of the most extraordinary and impressive of man's mighty toys, in the field of transportation, is the dirigible balloon. Before the war I used to see these huge sausage-shaped balloons floating, ploughing as if without effort, through the air above Berlin. The people thought of them as sources of recreation, as possibly valuable instruments of transport. But few, not even Count Zeppelin himself, seem to have given very serious consideration to the military value of Zeppelins, and to their use as important factors in national defense. The cost of Zeppelin travel then, as it remains today, was so great as to be within reach only of the wealthy. Zeppelin travel was not an accepted mode of transportation. It was still an unrealized dream, economically, to be realized only in some future, believed not exceedingly remote.

When the Great War broke, the German people waxed enthusiastic over their Zeppelins. Count Zeppelin became a national hero, and was greeted with acclaim wherever he traveled throughout Germany. While the German war ministry was uncertain as to the potential value of the Zeppelins in war, it encouraged the enthusiastic faith in them voiced by the people. Although it had been forbidden by the peace conference at The Hague in 1899 to "drop explosives from the sky to injure combatants on the earth," no German doubted that the Zeppelin would be used to bomb enemy cities. The popular ideas regarding the destructiveness of the Zeppelin were absurdly exaggerated. Many people believed that a single huge bomb, dropped from a Zeppelin, might destroy an entire enemy city. Two facts were not taken into account—the enormous amount of explosives necessary to blow up a moderate area, and the comparatively small amount of explosives a Zeppelin could carry.

The history of the Zeppelins in the World War affords an impressive illustration of the mighty effort put forward by Germany to win the war. It spite of the excited and boastful talk about the Zeppelins, Germany had at the beginning of the war only eight! Two of these were commercial, the other six belonged to the army. So determined were the German people and the high military command to exploit the Zeppelin to the fullest extent, that during the war the number of Zeppelins launched at Friedrichshafen was the impressive total of 88!

The achievements of the Zeppelins at first were far from impressive. Nevertheless Count Zeppelin said in 1915: "The future of the war in the air depends upon the technical development of the Zeppelin as an effective offensive weapons," although their importance for scouting purposes was fully demonsrated. On one occasion a fleet of six Zeppelins was lost, five being blown by a storm on the coast of France and one sent to earth, a virtual ruin, in Thuringia. But it is to be remembered that before the battle of Jutland, the LZ-11, on the night of May 31-June 1, 1916, brought the message to the German fleet that the British fleet was being mobilized. The significance of the Zeppelin is well described in Margaret Goldsmith's biography of Count Zeppelin.

The Rhyming Optimist

By ALINE MICHAELIS.

Moonlight in the Orchard!

Last night the orchard was a place
Unworldly, very fair;
Touched with a new, ethereal grace
Stood budding plum and pear.

For every tree was wreathed in bloom
Turned silver where across the gloom
Crept moonbeams' pallid light.

The silver shafts of moonlight lay
On clovers at my feet,
The blossoms whiter than by day
The drifting air more sweet.

Last night an argent loveliness
Across the orchard gleamed.
Each blossom touched with a caress

It seemed so far from earthly things,
That hillside veiled in white.
Hope gained new vision; thought, new wings
In orchard ways, last night.

LISTEN, WORLD!

By Elsie Robinson

Something gone wrong just when you thought you were sitting pretty, at last? And you're disgusted enough to quit?

"Are things always going to be like this?" you cry. "Won't I ever get the breaks?"

No. Never the breaks you want. Of this you may be sure—WHATEVER YOU GET OUT OF LIFE IT WON'T BE ENOUGH.

If you're a healthy human, you'll never be perfectly happy, comfortable or satisfied. You'll always be wanting something—rebelling against something. You'll always be discontented. But there's nothing abnormal about that. You shouldn't grieve over it. Or peeve over it. Still less, should you settle down and try to be resigned.

ACCEPT DISCONTENT AS A NORMAL AND NECESSARY CONDITION OF YOUR LIFE—AND THANK GOD FOR IT!

For the day you're satisfied, completely content, that day you'll be THROUGH. . .that day you'll be as through with this life as though you had died.

You can't go on living and be satisfied. If you're satisfied, you STAY PUT. If you're living, you PUSH ON. And pushing on is bound to mean discontent and rebellion. Growth is just one dissatisfaction after another.

You and I are here today because, billions of years ago, a one-celled gob in a primeval swamp rebelled. Wanted two cells instead of one. Got all swelled up with discontent until it expanded into two cells and then grew on and on—through countless discontents—until there came a creature with a brain and soul called MAN.

And the Bible's story—"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life: And man became a living soul."

A little dumb dust in the great hand of God—that was all man was at first—UNTIL GOD FILLED HIM WITH THE BREATH OF LIFE.

What was the secret of that breath? What did a great, busy God do to a little dumb dust to turn it into a man—made in His image?

He breathed into that dust His own WISH FOR LIFE . . His own creative restlessness . . His own DIVINE DISCONTENT. God had discontent. That old book of Genesis is the story of a magnificent insatiable discontent. God wasn't satisfied with an empty sky, a sterile earth. He hung new stars within that sky. He planted trees within that earth. And from dumb dust He made—HIS PARTNER. To share His discontent—TO SHARE THE GLORY AND THE GRIEF OF DISCONTENT.

Do not peeve or grieve about discontent. Do not try to make yourself resigned. ACCEPT IT! BE GLAD FOR IT! GET BUSY WITH IT! IT IS THE MOST SACRED GIFT YOU HAVE!

ONCE OVERS

By J. J. MUNDY

Do you ever pay any attention to the person filling a menial position in your department?

Feel a little superior, don't you, and so you don't often smile on the errand boy or the jack-of-all trades who cleans the brass and keeps things shiningly clean around your office?

While none cares to be patronized, there is satisfaction and even pleasure in the thought that those higher up are not oblivious to the pfesence of the ones whose place could be filled most any time.
